NEWSPAPER REPORTERS.
Did you ever think of switching over to the advertising field; of being a star advertising writer in a big advertising department organized along advertising agency lines?
The best advertising copy writer we ever had was a reporter before he jumped—and how that man could write! He found himself in a field where he could still use his nose for news, put over scoops, and twist the English language to his heart's content. And of course, he advanced. We saw to that.
Another man just like him is needed; a writer of unbridled imagination who can, if need be, write sob sister copy about a concrete mixer, or a lathe, or an engine rod packing. If the idea appeals to you, write a letter that will prove your writing ability.

MAKING NEW RECORD FOR STEEL OUTPUT

Production at Present Rate Is Probably Between 44,000,000 and 45,000,000 Tons a Year.

EXPECT RELAXATION SOON

Mill Owners Believe Government Will Let Up on Them After Pending Orders Are Filled.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, May 18.—The report of steel ingot production in April indicates that production was at the rate of 42,650,000 gross tons a year, the highest attained since last November. There has since been a material increase, and the present rate of production is probably between 44,000,000 and 45,000,000 tons a year, or the highest rate ever reached. The most conservative estimate of capacity is 47,000,000 tons, but there are some estimates at 50,000,000 tons.

The present production rate is so satisfactory that steel makers are concerning themselves less with the matter of increasing the rate of output than they are with the question of maintaining the rate, for the hot weather impends, when the production has always fallen off from 10 to 20 per cent., while a repetition next Winter of last year's troubles is to be provided against as far as possible.

The demands of the Washington authorities for a large increase in the shipments of war steel began about April 1, and were, of course, predicated upon the rate at which war steel had been shipped in the first three months of the year. With the much larger output now obtaining, and the diversion to war orders of a much larger percentage of the production than formerly, the war steel shipments are extremely heavy.

Steel makers are disposed to expect that after a few weeks of the present intensive shipping of war steel the Government will be disposed to relax its efforts to obtain for some of its activities the maximum amount of steel that can be furnished. There is less likelihood of relaxation in the pressure for ship steel than is the case with any of the other important activities. The rate of shipbuilding is increasing rapidly, and the amount of ship steel that can and should be stocked is very large, as there should be stocks not only at the shipyards but also at the fabricating shops.

The coke situation is much more satisfactory than at any previous time this year. There are practically no furnaces banked, or running at gaited rates, on account of lack of coke, although there are a few idle stacks awaiting coke in order to blow in. The National Tube Company, which for many weeks operated ten of its eleven blast furnaces, has blown in the one idle stack. The Carnegie Steel Company is operating fully as many furnaces as it normally does in the most active times. The last three weekly reports of the Geological Survey show an average weekly production of coke at the rate of over 60,000,000 net tons a year, or more than 10 per cent. in excess of the average rate of production in 1916, yet in that year the existing blast furnaces were well supplied with coke and made 39,400,000 tons of pig iron, so that present supplies of coke should be approximately sufficient for operating the increased number of blast furnaces now available. In addition there is about 75,000 tons a week of by-product coking capacity to become available within the next two or three months.

Regulating Shipments of Steel.

Regulation by the Government of shipments of pig iron and steel products is daily becoming more thorough. Results are now accruing from the inquiries recently instituted by steel makers as to the precise use to which customers intend to put steel now on order, and a similar inquiry has been started by merchant blast furnaces among their customers. Furnaces and mills are indisposed to make any shipments to customers until the required information is furnished, whereupon shipments are made in accordance with the importance of the use, from a war viewpoint, to which the customer intends to put the material.

There is a well-defined series of priorities in the case of material ordered, directly or indirectly, for the various war activities, including shipbuilding, shell manufacture, &c., and another series of priorities is being developed with respect to the so-called "commercial" uses of steel. The manufacture of agricultural implements and the production and transportation of petroleum were recently accorded places at the head of the last named list.

Much more attention is being paid by Washington to the requirements of jobbers in iron and steel. It is now recognized that the jobbers have furnished a great deal of war steel from their stocks without being given priority orders whereby they could duplicate the material. The Government and the mills are working together in this matter, and jobbers are receiving more attention than formerly. On account of the general scarcity of steel, however, it is very difficult for them to obtain shipments despite the greater consideration being given to their requirements.

The iron and steel industry in Pittsburgh is highly gratified at the decision of the Washington authorities to locate its new munition plant in this immediate neighborhood, a plant that was conceived long ago, and was got into the form of a definite proposition weeks ago, to be the largest of its kind in this country. The location was the last thing to be announced.

There has always been a question whether, if the United States Steel Corporation had not been formed, the American Steel and Wire Company would have carried out John W. Gates's plan of building a very large steel plant on Neville Island, the site of the new ordnance factory. The plans contemplated the moving of all the wire company's facilities in the district to the one plant, which would have a capacity much greater than the combined capacity of the plants moved. It was generally admitted that if capital had been available the plant would have been a well-positioned one.

It became clear, however, that the wire company was not in position to build such a plant without a great deal of new financing. The Neville furnace was transferred to the management of the Carnegie Steel Company years ago. The furnace and steel plant part, however, appears to be a distinctly Steel Corporation proposition rather than an adjunct to any of its subsidiaries. There will be a complete steel plant comprising the present blast furnace and perhaps more, together with open-hearth furnaces, of which there are none at the present time, the steel plant to be operated and owned by the Steel Corporation.

The munition plant proper will be owned by the Government, which will supply the funds, the Steel Corporation giving gratis all its services in connection with the erection and the operation of the plant. It is a magnificent gift, and indicative of the general spirit of helpfulness that characterizes steel men in their support of the Government and its war policies.

Confer on New Ordnance Plant.

Ten steel experts held a meeting here yesterday for the purpose of planning for the construction and operation of the big ordnance plant, in which the United States Army was represented by several officers. Members of the Erection Committee present were John Reis, Vice President, and William J. Filbert, Controller of the United States Steel Corporation; Homer D. Williams, President of the Carnegie Steel Company; Taylor Alderdice, Vice President of the National Tube Company; August Zeising, President of the American Bridge Company; C. C. Thorp, Vice President of the Indiana Steel Company; George G. Crawford, President of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company; William Wigham, Vice President of the Carnegie Steel Company; C. L. Miller, Vice President and General Manager of the American Steel and Wire Company, and W. B. Schiller, President of the National Tube Company.

The committee stated that it would take three years to complete the plant, and the first gun will not be turned out before that time. Two additional blast furnaces will be built, as the one in proximity, owned by the Carnegie Steel Company, has a daily capacity of 450 tons only, which is not near enough for the requirements of the new plant. John S. Oursler of New Castle, who will take charge of the building, was at the meeting, and is a thorough mill man, having risen from the position of water boy at the age of 14 to be Superintendent of the Carnegie Steel mills at New Castle. The actual erection as well as the fabrication of the structural steel for the plant will be done by the American Bridge Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, at their plant located fifteen miles below Neville Island.

There is considerable inquiry in the market for soft steel in the way of billets, sheet bars and slabs, but there is practically nothing to be had. The Government does not buy steel in these forms, and as in normal times mills frequently have surpluses of this sort, it might be supposed that there would be steel available at this time, but such is not the case.

Brokers who are in close touch with the mills at all times practically have stopped putting inquiries before them, as nothing results. There is a demand on the part of the large steel producers for both ingots and billets, the latter naturally preferred, but it is only occasionally that large producers, with all their influence, can pick up any material.

Demand for sheet bars is not measured by the amount of inquiry in the market, for there are mills that would be glad to buy thousands of tons of sheet bars a month that are not inquiring at all, knowing it would be useless to do so. Conditions as to the scarcity of sheet bars in the open market will not be improved by the pooling that may possibly be undertaken, as that would merely intercept such supplies as might in future come into the market. Orders for sheets, like orders for all other steel products, have been allocated to sheet mills in proportion to their capacity, hence in order to give all mills an equal opportunity to fill their Government orders they would have to have equal supplies of sheet bars, and that is not the case now since operations by individual interests have been running all the way from 50 to 80 per cent.

There is some inquiry for shell discard steel, but very few transactions occur because buyer and seller cannot get together. The prospective user desires the corresponding material in soft steel, while the producer sets his material against the fixed maximum for low phosphorus scrap, $39, and claims that if he cannot get approximately as much as this for the material, plus the cost of rolling in case small billets are to be produced, he does better to keep the material and use it as scrap.

The prescribed limitations for scrap to be worth $39 are that the material shall be new, of certain size, and analyze not over .04 per cent. in both phosphorus and sulphur, also that it is to be used in acid open-hearth furnaces. Quoted prices on shell discard steel run from the set prices down to a dollar or so below, while bid prices are much lower. The set prices are: Billets, $47.50; small billets, $51; slabs, $50; sheet bars, $51; rods, $57; rods are free on board Pittsburgh and the other commodities free on board mill, Pittsburgh or Youngstown.

8,000 BANKS OUTSIDE OF RESERVE SYSTEM

Chairman Pierre Jay Estimates Their Resources at Possibly Ten Billion Dollars.

SEES NEED OF AFFILIATION

Says Bankers Have Their Service to Perform and Sacrifice to Make for Government.

Pierre Jay, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, calls attention to the fact that up to the present time only 385 State institutions have joined the Federal Reserve System, and that some 8,000 institutions with resources of perhaps $10,000,000,000, constituting 30 per cent. of the banking resources of the country, are still outside of the system. He says that these banks and trust companies have not yet answered President Wilson's call "to share the burden and privilege" of mobilizing the banking reserves of the United States, and asks why they do not come forward.

Mr. Jay refers to the campaign for the Liberty Loan conducted by the bankers last month, and says:

"Bankers throughout the length and breadth of the land have been urging their customers with every emphasis to buy Liberty bonds; 'save and buy till it hurts'; 'this is the civilian's form of service and he must perform it whatever self-denial, or even sacrifice, it entails.' But the bankers, too, have their service to perform and their sacrifice, it may be, to make. Their service is to contribute to the common fund created by Congress to stand back of the Government, the banks and the industries of the country; their sacrifice, if any, is to lose a little interest on their reserve balances in order to do their utmost toward winning the war.

"Many State bankers say, 'We have subscribed for Government certificates; we have worked and incurred expense in selling Liberty bonds; we are turning over our gold to the Federal Reserve bank. Is not this sufficient?' However magnificent their patriotic devotion and co-operation in these ways have been, the answer must be, No. Suppose an able-bodied man of 25 came before the draft board and said he had bought Liberty bonds, cut down his living expenses, and was working for the Red Cross; would he obtain exemption on these grounds? No; for he is in a class which is called upon for a specific military service—the mobilization of America's man power.

"The banks of the country are a class which is called upon for just as specific a financial service—the mobilization of America's banking power. The bank with sound management and assets is just as liable for the one service as the man with sound mind and body for the other.

"We think of our soldiers as conscripts; yet over half of them are volunteers. In the financial service of the Government the national banks are the conscripts, drafted into the Reserve system by Congress. They could have avoided the draft and the cost, if any, which membership entails, by becoming State institutions; but only a bare handful of them did so. It was left to the State institutions to join the system as volunteers, with all the freedom of entering and leaving Government service which volunteers enjoy. The President and the country look to them to step forward, as half of our soldiers have done, and volunteer, at least for the period of the war.

"Will they do it?"

RUTGERS TO HONOR DANIELS

Secretary of the Navy to be Made a Doctor of Laws on Tuesday.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 18.—Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at the 152d Commencement of Rutgers College on Tuesday. Mr. Daniels is planning to reach here in the morning, and will probably speak at the annual Alumni dinner in the afternoon.

Rutgers will award forty-two undergraduate degrees, as compared with seventy-seven last year, many of the seniors having been released from training camps to attend the Commencement exercises, which started on Friday. Yesterday afternoon the Rutgers Cadet Battalion gave its annual exhibition drill before 5,000 persons.

Other honorary degrees to be conferred include: Doctor of Laws, Frank Bergen, Esq., of New Jersey; Doctor of Divinity, the Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw of Utica, and the Rev. William H. Boocock of Buffalo; Doctor of Science, Robert Meyo Catlin, mining engineer, of New Jersey; Doctor of Letters, Mgr. John A. O'Grady of New Brunswick; Master of Arts, Sprague Carlton, M. D., of New York. Nine graduate degrees will be conferred, including the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, to Mrs. Mary Mitchell Moore, A. B., Bryn Mawr, the first woman to win a graduate degree from Rutgers.

COLUMBIA COMMENCEMENT.

Martial Touches Planned for Exercises Beginning May 31.

Columbia's second war commencement will take place on Wednesday, June 5, according to announcement of the university Trustees. Many martial touches to the festivities that last from Friday, May 31, until the degrees and awards of honor have been conferred, Commencement Day morning, are expected. Final arrangements for the activities of the graduating class have not been made, but it is expected that several of the usual events will be missing because of the relatively small number of students who will be present to receive their degrees.

The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered in the main gymnasium by the Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D., rector of Grace Church, on Sunday, June 2.

Several presentations to the university were announced, all of which will be officially given during the commencement festivities. The class of 1891 gate, at 117th Street and Broadway, the chimes for St. Paul's Chapel which the class of 1893 are giving, a service flag bearing 385 stars representing the members of the Columbia faculties who are now in the national service, are among the presentations to be made.

The conferring of the degrees will take place Wednesday morning at 9:30 o'clock in the main gymnasium. On the same day the Barnard Students' Hall, a gift of Jacob H. Schiff, will be open for inspection. The hall is already being used by the students.

Dates for the usual commencement season events will be announced later, it was said yesterday. These will include an Alumni luncheon, at which addresses will be delivered by American, French, and British diplomatists, to take place on Commencement Day; the dedication of the Van Amringe Memorial, on June 5; a Phi Beta Kappa address by Dr. Mary E. Woolley, President of Mount Holyoke College; Teachers College River Day, on May 31; the Barnard senior play, on May 31 and June 1.

Trinity Church Lease.

Snows, Ltd., exporters and importers, having principal offices at 17 Battery Place, have leased from Converse & Co. and from Trinity Church, the entire six-story building at 236-238 Spring Street, running through to 27 Clark Street. The lease is for a term of years and represents a total outlay in rent of nearly $100,000. The tenants will alter the building for warehouse purposes. William A. White & Sons negotiated the deal.

WRIT AGAINST GAS COMPANY

Court Orders Queens Concern to Answer Service Board Suit.

William L. Ransom, chief counsel of the Public Service Commission, obtained from Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum yesterday an order requiring the New York and Queens Gas Company to answer immediately the petition of the commission for a writ of mandamus compelling the company to extend its mains to Douglaston, Douglas Manor, and Little Neck.

The company has fought the order of the commission through all of the courts of the State and the United States Supreme Court, and has been beaten in all of them, but it still refuses to obey the order. There is no provision in the law for the punishment of gas and electric corporations which fail to obey the orders of the commission, and the commission has frequently declared that the company has appealed to the courts for the sole purpose of delaying the improvement.

If the writ of mandamus is issued, and the company fails to obey, it can be punished for contempt of court. The company is a subsidiary of the Consolidated Gas Company.

Help Asked For a Family.

Years of happy married life, with a devoted husband who provided necessities and many small comforts besides, did not train Lucia R. to meet the sudden responsibilities which his death from tuberculosis threw upon her. Though in no way prepared to support herself, she was compelled to take up the burden of feeding and clothing four small children, keeping them clean and training them to be useful citizens, and having enough money left to pay the rent for two little rooms each month. It has taken some time to remove the effects of privation and the danger of mother and children developing the disease which killed Mr. R., but today all are quite well and Mrs. R. is learning how to support herself and how best to care for the home. She still needs some help, however, for the meagre wages brought in by part time work in "finishing" garments could not support even the most economical family. The Charity Organization Society appeals for $120 to tide them safely through the next six months. Gifts of any amount toward this fund should be sent to the office of the society at 105 East Twenty-second Street, and will be promptly acknowledged.

The Garden Spot of the Garden State

Long Branch

No Longer a Monte Carlo, But an Ideal Home City

LONG BRANCH IS MORE THAN A SEASHORE RESORT. It combines the pleasures of beach and surf with the delights of picturesque river, dainty lakes and sylvan beauties. Situated on a coast plateau, the highest point of land along the entire Atlantic Seaboard, extending along the ocean for six miles and inland two miles, it offers a choice of multiplicity of types of environment in its various sections, which include Elberon, West End, Hollywood, North Long Branch, Branchport and Pleasure Bay. IT IS BOTH COUNTRY AND CITY, for here are found not only the attractions of country—trees, lawns, hedges and freedom from crowding—but also all urban conveniences that make for comfort and health. The result is the most healthful place in Jersey, with the lowest death rate.

THERE ARE FACILITIES FOR ALL SPORTS and amusements, including yachting, boating, bathing, fishing, crabbing, tennis, polo, baseball and golf. Then there are the city's fine drives—120 miles of them here and an equal mileage radiating through the contiguous country—all in a territory embellished with the highest skill of landscape gardening.

SIX PRESIDENTS HAVE SUMMERED AT THIS DELIGHTFUL RESORT. With the whole country to choose from, not half as many have chosen any other place. THE NEAREST POINT ON THE JERSEY SHORE TO NEW YORK and the great metropolitan area by express trains—Long Branch is only slightly over an hour distant by the P. R. R. and Jersey Central. There are some 100 New York trains a day in summer, not to mention the Sandy Hook Bay and the River Steamers. Commuting is easy and pleasant the year around, and the rates as low as 38 cents a round trip.

"FOUNDATION SKIRT" FAVORED BY WOMEN

Blouses and Sweaters Suitable to Combine with It for Street Wear—Chiffon Overblouses for Use at Home in Afternoon.

At the meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, just ended, there was an extremely interesting discussion concerning women's dress. And every woman in the land, like these club women in conference assembled, must ask herself what is the proper standard of dressing in view of war conditions, the high cost of living, &c.

Some women—and they had an opportunity to present their side at the General Federation meeting—advocate uniforms for all women. There is another faction which advocates the use of one type of garment, allowing for changes of overdress, &c. And there are still other women who favor the same old extravagance with styles that change constantly and are not worthy of even casual notice unless they are imported and cost large sums of money.

At the federation conference there was a bona fide exhibition of the various possible styles of conservation dressing, and there were addresses and talks by those who know most about this sort of thing.

It would seem that of all the phases of New Thought dress which have been from time to time created, that of the foundation skirt or foundation slip with many blouses and slip-over frocks has received the greatest amount of kindly attention and even a fair amount of actual wear among those women who are courageous enough to adopt something entirely new before it has been approved by the masses. In London gowns of this character have been popular among a certain set for some years past. Even before the war a certain exclusive department store in that city had a special department devoted entirely to the creation and sale of slip-over garments. Here in America we are only just beginning to discover this phase of dressing.

Taking the separate skirt as a foundation, there are many and various degrees of blouses, smock and three-quarter slips to be considered in the way of making it a gown suitable for any occasion during any hour of the day or night. We are entering the Summer season. Take a white skirt of soft and heavy silk—washable it must be, in order to make it durable and economical. If the skirt is pleated it has many advantages over the one that is made plain. It is more graceful; it wears better because rubbing does not come always and forever in the same spot. Another distinctive advantage of the pleated skirt is that it subdues the lines of figures which are either too thin or too fat, the pressed lines of its straight folds giving, at the same time, the necessary straight effect. And why should we be particularly sparing of material when we are supposed to be indulging in only one skirt a season?

For street wear, with this skirt of pleated white there is the tailored blouse with the sleeveless jacket of satin or velvet. One of the latest of these is made of golden lustre satin, quite full and plain in design, with rolled back revers and open in front. It is confined at the waistline by a belt of black patent leather, and, worn with a stiff little walking hat of black mijan, it is most fetching.

Another new idea for street wear with the separate skirt is the sweater of velvet or satin. Instead of wearing a sleeveless jacket over the necessary extra blouse, one has the sweater made all in one, including sleeves which are very loose at the armholes and sometimes even loose at the cuffs. This garment is most smart in effect when it is of some dark tone worn with the skirt of white. One seen recently was made of dark blue chiffon velvet lined with charmeuse in an exquisite tone of blue violet. It was cut on uncompromisingly straight lines without being fitted to the figure in any way. It ended at a line around the middle of the hips and there it turned back for several inches to show the glorious color of the lining as a band between the white of the skirt and the dark of the waist. The sleeves, which were loose at both ends, also turned back, and the square neck was bound with a tiny edge of the violet charmeuse.

The tunic of white to match the skirt in heaviness is a good thing for Summer and for street wear. It has a panel back and front just as long and just as wide as the proportions of the figure make necessary. Then there is an underblouse slip of white Georgette or chiffon or marquisette or some other thin material, which makes the sleeves and underarm portions. It is stunning when done without any trimming, though there are these most successfully designed which have embroidery in bright colors distributed at discreet intervals on panels and on sleeves.

Now, discard the idea of a street frock altogether and retain only the skirt which has done duty for the above-mentioned more formal occasions. You now want a house dress—one that will do for lazy Summer afternoons when guests are expected and when you must be adequately clothed, while, at one and the same time, you long to present a picture of easy luxury. Well, in a case of this sort a chiffon overblouse is just the thing. It can be and it has been done over and over again, so that it has every semblance of a dressy gown, with no suggestion of the negligée in its soft folds. Trim it with something rather formal—say bands of colored satin, ribbon edgings, or some really ornate bands of colorful wool embroidery. One noticed was made of orchid-colored crêpe de Chine, lined with Georgette crêpe in an illusive tone of what might be termed oyster white. The edges were finished all the way around with a buttonholing of white wool, and the blouse, which was slip-over-the-head in design, was tucked together and held by medallions of wool embroidery directly under the arms and an inch or two above the waistline. You can see how, with the swaying of the body, the softness of the lining just a tone different from the color of the skirt was allowed to show now and again in a most pleasing manner.

For evening this skirt can be used again, and the idea then would be to have the overdress hang nearly to the floor, using the skirt only as a foundation. Many are the materials among the new American weaves that will be suitable for a tunic needed for evening wear. There are the printed chiffons and silk voiles, charming and wonderfully adaptable for draped and party things. There are the lovely soft satins of a charmeuse tendency, which are flung over one shoulder and droop from the opposite shoulder in truly Grecian manner. For Summer, of course, and with a skirt of white, to which we are persistently clinging for our foundation, these should be used in pastel shades with only the beauty of the material and the interesting lines of the drapery to make them distinctive.

A tunic of heavy primrose satin cut over a simple kimono pattern, shaped so that it hung quite a bit lower at back than it did in front, and with sleeves which flared at the elbow, was faced with a tone of extremely light blue chiffon. The neck was becomingly low and plainly finished, and the waistline was finished by a crushed girdle of the primrose color. It made a lovely and simple evening frock in the height of good taste.

Yes, you will say, this is all very well for Summer, but does the rule hold good when it comes to Winter? It does indeed! For the skirt of white, substitute one of black in a heavy weight of satin or of crêpe de chine. Apply the principles contained in these suggestions for Summer and see them work out satisfactorily for the necessities of Winter. The street frock becomes a serge or a broadcloth overtunic, that for afternoon changes itself into one of chiffon velvet or of one of the finer qualities of velveteen, and the evening gown, as in all other instances of dress, remains very much the same as to general character and outlines.

Of course, as you can readily see, there are thousands of variations on this foundation scheme. Once one begins to contemplate them, the possibilities loom up so numerous and so large that one is fairly bewildered. But really this scheme is being tried in many households and it is meeting with astonishing success. Women relish the idea of finding their own lines and style and clinging to them, with never a chance of a mistake and a new gown that proves itself unfit for wear because it does not just happen to be their style.

So far we have considered only the dress of many faces when the foundation is a skirt. It is easy to see that a skirt is only possible for certain figures, but there is an alternative in the shape of an underslip which hangs from the shoulders. This is very much more becoming to figures which have outgrown their girlish slenderness and to those which, even in the beginning, could not boast of straight lines. A slip, fitted or not, as preference demands, is made of the same materials as the skirt would be, and then the tunics are cut in harmony with the lines of the figure and made for wear over this foundation.

You will see what infinite opportunity arises for the use and wear of ultra-fine and well-woven materials. Cut on a general pattern of this sort there is no chance of spoiling the fabrics. They can be sewed together with not an inch of them ruined or even cut into, and one does not feel that one has insulted or ruined a beautiful work of art. Also, a beautiful fabric is always more beautiful when its lines and pattern are left as undisturbed as possible.

A number of dressmakers have taken up the designing of gowns of this sort as a special and even as an exclusive feature. One makes a specialty of stenciling and wood blocking fine bits of velvet and satin and chiffon. On the plain surfaces this idea in decoration stands out with wonderful effect.

Another artist spends her time producing garments of this character which have been dyed by hand. Still another makes hers out of hand-woven materials, and so on, until the field has broadened and widened to the point of the tunic dress being an ordinary instead of an extraordinary thing. The hand of the artist is necessary in its construction. It looks simple enough, you will say—but that is just were the art comes in. It is simple only in the artistic quality of its conception and accomplishment. The perfect sewing of hooks and eyes is unknown to this modern dress, but the lines of its shaping can be done by no trained mechanic. It must have the lightness that comes from inspired handling or its worth is nil.

CONTEST FOR BEST W. S. S. POSTERS

Adolph Treidler Wins $1,000 Prize Among 2,200 Contenders—Rathbun's Window Card Gets Honorable Mention.

IN the $2,000 competition held by the New York War Savings Committee and the American Institute of Graphic Arts, first prize of $1,000 has just been awarded to Adolph Treidler's striking poster, "Help Stop This." Honorable mention was given to Seward Hume Rathbun's window card, "Keep the Line Moving."

Treidler was first in a field of 2,200. Two hundred and fifty of the best entries in the contest are on exhibition at the Public Library.

Treidler's poster shows a giant German, in field gray uniform, dragging his gun through a ruined French village. He carries a knife, and between his feet is the prostrate form of a dead woman. Shells have torn up the ground. In the background is a church, but the figure towers over all. The sky is a deep blue. Treidler has executed the poster in tempera.

Coles Phillips was the other prize winner in the general poster class. He got $300 for a poster entitled "Money or Life."

In the car and window card class C. B. Inwood took $250, the first prize. The second card prize went to Mrs. L. M. Rudge for a card she called "If You Are Worth Fighting For." She got $100. Among the advertisement and cartoon entrants M. Leone Bracker got $250 for "Behold Your Enemy." Hal Marchbanks won the second prize of $100 in this class.

Honorable mention was given to Casper Emerson, Jr., for his poster, "To Win," while mention was made of posters by McClelland Barclay, "Don't Fail Me"; Lee Mero, "Out There," and Edward A. Wilson, "Keep It Burning."

In Class B, for magazine and cartoon advertising, honorable mention was given to Fred W. Goudy's "Make Your Patriotism Pay You"; and mention was given to Charles F. Miller's "Our Stamp or His"; Clarence Rowe's "The Makings of a Patriot"; and David Silve's "Habit of Thrift."

In Class C, for window or car card, honorable mention was given to Ray Greenleaf for "Buy—You Know Why," and mention was given to Fred F. Crouse for his "Buy Now or Bye Bye Later"; to Fred J. Hoertz for "Put Ships on the Waters"; and to Seward Hume Rathbun for "Keep the Line Moving."

Seward Hume Rathbun's W. S. S. Window Card, "Keep the Line Moving," Which Won Honorable Mention.

TEA PARTIES FOR SOLDIERS' MOTHERS

NOW that the Militia of Mercy has its relief activities systematized it has taken up another important branch of war work—that of keeping up the morale of those who must remain at home. Much has been said of the need of cheerful letters to the soldiers, but heretofore little has been done to get at the root of the difficulty, put the people at home in the proper frame of mind to influence their relatives "over there."

As a beginning it was decided to bring together the mothers and wives of soldiers and sailors, so that they might talk to their hearts' content on the subject now consuming their lives, so that they might exchange tales of their boys and find ready listeners. Two experimental teas were arranged. To one the mothers of the boys at the Pelham Bay Training Camp were invited. The other was for the mothers of the boys of the 1st Battalion.

Twenty-five of the navy mothers were got together. It had been previously explained to them that the object of the tea was first to get their minds off themselves and to let them see that other mothers had made equal, if not greater, sacrifices. Much stress was laid upon their obligation to take a more sanguine view of conditions for the sake of the sons who were fighting. Each was urged to bring some work; it was pointed out that the committee wanted to make it a homey affair, as nearly like the old-fashioned quiltin' bee as possible. A house at 163 East Sixty-fifth Street was lent by Mrs. Garry for the teas.

The workers encountered various obstacles. There were mothers who reasoned that they had given enough by allowing their boys to go, and they did not feel like doing any additional war work; others preferred to nurse their grief alone; still others were just shy. But a good number came. And an interesting gathering it was! Mothers from luxurious homes, who are plunging into all branches of relief work in an effort to forget their own grief, were glad for an opportunity to cheer the less fortunate. A laundress, who had taken valuable time from her work, was eager to tell of a heroic deed of her boy. An Italian woman, carrying a babe in her arms, unable to speak a word of English, puzzled the hostess, who was at a loss to know how to reach her. Finally she thought of an Italian poem written in honor of General Cadorna, published recently. The Italian woman was beside herself with enthusiasm. She knitted and smiled, and thenceforth her eloquent gesticulations were quite easily interpreted by her neighbors.

"Dear me," said an old lady, "I suppose I should have stayed at home today. Johnnie just got back yesterday from his second trip across, and I have hardly seen him, but I told him about this meeting, and he wanted me to come. He said I might get more cheerful if I saw some other mothers."

A few were present who had lost their sons.

They worked and talked throughout the afternoon. There was a surprise at tea time, when about a dozen boys from the Pelham Bay Training Station appeared for an hour of music and gayety. It was a "request" program, but if the mothers asked for any songs that were gloomy they were politely told that the repertoire did not include doleful melodies.

It turned out that in connection with the musical program there was a conspiracy afoot. The boys later confessed that they wanted to try on their unsuspecting mothers some of the stuff for "Biff Bang," their forthcoming show at the Century Theatre.

Those who attended the first tea spread the news, and last week seventy women assembled. To many of them the tea day is becoming a most important event.

SOCIETY ACTIVE IN RED CROSS DRIVE

Prominent Women Form Film Committee to Present Patriotic Movies—Five Thousand Girls to Dance in May Fete in Central Park—Racing for Society on Saturday—Plans for June Weddings.

IDEAL atmospheric conditions gave an impetus to the outdoor affairs during the week, and the open season is now fairly on its way. On Saturday the Turf and Field Club will come into its own, after being closed since last Autumn, with the race meet of the United Hunts at the Belmont Park Terminal.

The activities of society are kaleidoscopic nowadays, with changing scenes amid the brilliant colors of late Spring, to which is added the snap and go of military novelties. Upper Fifth Avenue, as a background for the parade and the commencement of the fortnight drive, pulses and radiates with the sign of the Red Cross.

Mottoes of this great humane organization that is healing the wounds of a war-ridden world appear on all of the big mansions on the avenue, the several Vanderbilt residences having all the street walls and fences placarded, with an electric cross blazing over the door of Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.

Some of the houses resounded during the week with the auctioneer's hammer and the camp songs of the front in the cause of humanity. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney opened her ballroom on Friday, at 871 Fifth Avenue, for the sale of parterre boxes at the Metropolitan Opera House, by auction, for the Italian Red Cross concert to be held on Friday night. At the home of Mrs. John Henry Hammond, 9 East Ninety-first Street, on Thursday, society women assembled in large numbers in the ballroom, lifted up their voices with Francis Rogers, and sang "Pack all your troubles in your old kit bag." The occasion was the camp concert given by Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, recently back from entertainment work with the Y. M. C. A. in the camps in France, in aid of the Art Workers Club for Women.

At the annual garden party of the Ladies Auxiliary of the New York Zoological Society, held on Thursday in Zoological Park, society crowded around an anti-aircraft gun mounted on its truck and fully equipped with a gun crew, while the animals in their cages were almost forgotten in the fervor of patriotism. War has toned down the display of fashion, and the flowering shrubs and the strutting peacocks had the field to themselves in point of display and color. A collection of French war posters and German war relics, collected by William Beebe, curator of birds, attracted much attention.

Now comes society with its own film committee, and as exhibitors of the official United States war films.

The opening night for the presentation by the Liberty Film Committee of the first exhibition in New York of the United States official war film, entitled "Pershing's Crusaders," under the auspices of the United States Government, will take place at the Lyric Theatre on Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock. This will be an official and gala occasion, and there will be many army and navy officers as well as diplomats and other dignitaries—a most representative audience. Society will be well represented also.

A special message has been received from the President emphasizing the fact that these pictures should prove to be an inspiration to all Americans. An interesting feature of the production will be the exhibition of war posters loaned by the Division of Pictorial Publicity, of which committee Charles Dana Gibson is the Chairman. There will be special musical features and prominent speakers to make the night a patriotic rally.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt is giving a dinner to the army officials, who will afterward be her guests at the exhibition, and Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar is to entertain the navy officials.

This is really a pictorial history of America's part in the great war, and full of human interest and patriotic thrills. These pictures, which show the grim earnestness of the United States Government in its war aims and its determination to stamp out Kaiserism, were taken by the United States Signal Corps and navy photographers at home and abroad. There are eight reels which graphically portray the rapidity with which the United States military and naval forces are preparing to make the world safe for democracy. Over here and over there our boys in khaki are seen in training and in action. Cantonments spring into being as if by magic; boys fresh from the farm, desk, and factory are hardened into fighting whirlwinds; massive ships are launched, airplanes speed through the air, uniforms are turned out by the million.

In the last half of the film the spectator will be transported to France, and see just what has been accomplished since the Stars and Stripes were carried over there. Secretary of War Baker and General John J. Pershing are seen on their tours of inspection to the battlefront and visiting the big bases at unknown ports. It is a revelation of a nation aroused in all its might. Here is the truth about the war. It's Uncle Sam's answer to the lies of the Hun.

Mrs. Edgar is Chairman of the committee, Mrs. Vanderbilt, Vice Chairman, and Clarence H. Mackay, Treasurer. Frederic R. Coudert is Honorary Secretary, and Miss Anne Shingleur, Executive Secretary.

President and Mrs. Wilson head the list of honorary patrons, others including the Secretary of State, Robert Lansing; Governor Whitman, James W. Gerard, Colonel Roosevelt, Elihu Root, Colonel Edwin M. House, Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., James M. Beck, the Belgian Minister, M. Cartier; Brig. Gen. William A. Mann, and Myron T. Herrick.

Many society women have taken boxes for the première. Tickets, at $3 each, may be had at the office of the committee, 30 East Forty-second Street.

WEDDINGS continue intermittently, with war interest attached to many that are hurried. The lull in nuptials, however, has been marked during the week, there being a more noticeable letdown than at any time since the rush of Easter weddings.

June is forging to the front, as it always remains a favorite month with the brides, bringing, as it does, the charm of country weddings, when all the world, at least that part not devastated by the Germans, is abloom.

On Saturday, June 8, Miss Maud Rives Borland and Justice Franklin Chase Hoyt, presiding Justice of the Children's Court, whose engagement was announced in April, will be married in Zion Church, Wappingers Falls, N. Y., which is near the country residence of Miss Borland, at New Hamburg. No invitations have been sent out, as it is to be a quiet family wedding.

Miss Borland will have Miss Evelyn Rives Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walker B. Smith of Newport, as her only attendant. Her brother, Lieutenant John Borland, U. S. N., of the Naval Training Station at Newport, is to give her in marriage. Edwin C. Hoyt will act as best man.

The wedding of Miss Isadora Bliss of Boston and Amory Sibley Carhart of this city will take place on Saturday, June 15, in Pequot Chapel, New London, Conn., where the Bliss country home is located.

Miss Bliss will be attended by her sister, Mrs. A. Malcolm Thomas, and the Misses Fanny Baldwin and Renee Carhart of New York; Leila Moore of New Orleans, and Helen Bennett of Boston. Little Miss Elise Thomas, the bride's niece, is to serve as flower girl.

Mr. Carhart has chosen Ensign Robert Payne to be his best man. His ushers will include Moorhead Patterson, John Emery, and Murray Mitchell of this city; Osborne C. Wood of Washington, George W. Helm of Louisville, Harrison Apthorpe of Milton, Mass., and A. Malcolm Thomas of St. Louis.

The wedding of Miss Anne Gilbert, daughter of Mrs. Riley Miles Gilbert, and Donald Fairfax Cammann is to be celebrated on June 3 at the home of the bride's mother, 563 Park Avenue.

Miss Ethel H. Huhn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Huhn of New York and Philadelphia, will be married to Lieutenant Joseph W. Bailey, Jr., U. S. R., on June 22 at the bride's residence in Philadelphia. The attendants so far have not been announced, except that Mrs. Morgan Belmont is to act as matron of honor.

Captain Edward Floyd-Jones Thorn of the Ordnance Department, N. A., and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Condé R. Thorn of this city, and Miss Marjorie S. Pierce, a daughter of Brig. Gen. William S. Pierce and Mrs. Pierce, were married last week at the home of the bride's sister in Springfield, Mass. Mrs. Thorn spent part of the Spring here with her cousin, Mrs. George L. McAlpin, at 9 East Ninetieth Street.

Mrs. L. Bayard Cummings of Brooklyn announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Dorothy Cummings, to Lieutenant Wilfrid Stuart Bastine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jackson Bastine, of New York, which took place on May 9. Lieutenant Bastine has just received his commission in the Field Artillery and expects to go overseas shortly.

Announcement has been made of the marriage, last Saturday, of Miss Dorothy Van Winkle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Van Winkle of Bayonne, N. J., and Lieutenant Harry V. Moser, who is attached to the aviation corps at Dallas, Texas. The bride has returned to Vassar College and will graduate in June. She will then join her husband in the South.

Miss Dorothy Ruth Gilroy, daughter of the late Thomas F. Gilroy, who was Mayor of New York from 1893 to 1895, and Thomas Frederick Allen Bibby of Liverpool, England, are to be married on June 12 at the Plaza. Miss Gilroy is the youngest of the children of the late Mayor, who died six years ago. Mr. Bibby lives at the Hotel Buckingham.

THE country clubs are preparing to open their doors to help fill the war charities chest. On May 30 a "Fête de Mai" is to be presented at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club, with special attractions during the afternoon and three playlets in the Garden Theatre after dinner, to be followed by dancing.

Tonight, at 40 West Fifty-seventh Street, the Entertainment Intime is to be held for the benefit of the Smoke and Canteen Fund of the Dewey Navy Recreation Committee of the Woman's Naval Service. Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury of Philadelphia, national Chairman of the Department of Navy Recreation, is here for the event, and society will be well represented.

Among the members of the canteen unit whose husbands have gone or are going to the front are Mrs. Herbert Shipman, Mrs. Cornelius Tangeman, Mrs. Oliver Perrin, Mrs. J. Philip Benkard, Mrs. William S. Rogers, and Mrs. Augustus F. Kountze.

On Tuesday, May 21, in Central Park the Girls' Branch Public Schools Athletic League will hold their eleventh annual park fête. They will assemble on the Sheep Meadow west of the Mall, and the music will be furnished by the band of the S. S. Recruit. Many distinguished persons have signified their intention of attending. Mrs. Alfred Seton Post is Chairman this year of the Fête Committee.

A rummage sale is to be given on Wednesday and Thursday at 52 East Forty-second Street for the benefit of the Babies' Dairies. Mrs. Orin Root heads the committee in charge, and Mrs. William Ross Proctor, Mrs. James Lee Brady, Mrs. Charles Greenough, Mrs. J. Francis Clark, Mrs. C. B. Alexander, and Mrs. Frederick T. Van Beuren are others interested.

On Sunday evening, May 26, at the Hippodrome, John McCormack has volunteered his services and those of his assisting artists for a concert in aid of the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum at Kingsbridge. This is to be under the patronage of Cardinal Farley and many well-known people.

The largest playground in the United States will be turned over to the soldiers and sailors when the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense opens its canteen in the Arsenal in Central Park, at Sixty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, on Decoration Day. Mrs. Philip Lydig will have personal supervision of the work in the Arsenal, and among her assistants will be some of the lieutenants of Mrs. George Ethridge, who is directing all the canteen work of the committee.

It is planned to turn the third floor of the Arsenal, which is open, and through which during the hot Summer months the park breezes will sweep, into a pleasant club for the soldiers and sailors. Other open-air canteens will be opened during the Summer in the smaller parks of the city, so that the hot months will be made as pleasant as possible for the soldiers here.

The exhibition and sale of paintings and sculpture at the Hotel Chatham during the week has proved a great success, and the British War Relief Association is pleased at the prospective sum to be realized on the sale. Every day members of the War Relief Association have been on duty at the Chatham to receive callers and sell pictures, while society women in general lent their time and services to further the work.

For the benefit of the Secours National, there will be a musicale and tea at the home of Vicomte and Vicomtess de la Jarrie, 1,270 Madison Avenue, this afternoon. Among those who will contributé their services are Mlle. Yvonne Garrick, Mrs. John R. McArthur, Mlle. Berta Reviere, Antonio Sala, Mlle. Helen Desmond, Mlle. Catherine Viley, Mme. Edna Maritone, Mlle. Marguerite Hall, and Paolo Martucci. At the conclusion of the programme there will be a silver offering.

Much interest is being manifested in the coming concert for the benefit of the Franco-Serbian Hospital and the Polish Army Hospital in France, which takes place in Aeolian Hall on Tuesday evening, and will be attended by many of the best-known society women who have interested themselves in the cause of the Serbian and Polish people. Many prominent women, including Mme. Paderewska, are among the patronesses.

The program will be somewhat novel, as the music will consist of Polish, Slavic, and Serbian folk songs and dances. The artists will include Miss Eva Didur, soprano; Mme. Norma Robins, contralto; Obrab Gjurin, tenor; Nikola Zaninavich, baritone, and Mme. Edourd de Kueylor, dancer, formerly of the Imperial ballet, Petrograd and Warsaw.

The Polish people are among the most patriotic in the world, and in every country where the Allies hold sway, the Poles have flocked to their standards to fight in freedom's cause. In the American armies there are nearly 140,000 Polish soldiers. These soldiers have enlisted of their own accord, as most of them are not subject to draft by the United States.

The Polish Army was brought to life by a decree of President Poincaré of France, June 4, 1917, and has met with the approval and sanction of the United States and other allied Governments. Many of the Polish soldiers are already on the western battlefront, while thousands of others are at different training camps waiting to answer the call.

AMONG the recent important engagement announcements was that made by the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo of Mr. McAdoo's daughter, Mrs. Charles Taber Martin of Chestnut Hill, a suburb of Philadelphia, to Clayton Platt, Jr., of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Martin is the eldest daughter of Mr. McAdoo and is the widow of Charles T. Martin, who died two and a half years ago. She was matron of honor at the marriage a year ago of her sister, Miss Nona McAdoo, to Ferdinand De Mohrenschildt, who was Second Secretary of the Russian Embassy at Washington. Her little daughter, Miss Nona Martin, won attention six weeks ago when she drew the strings that unveiled the copy of the Statue of Liberty when her grandfather opened the Third Liberty Loan campaign in Philadelphia. Mr. Platt is a member of one of the oldest families in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Augur of Hillhome, Suffern, N. Y., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elizabeth B. Augur, to Clifford M. Markle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Markle of New Haven, Conn. Mr. Markle has been in France with the Sanitary Detachment of the 102d Regiment, and has been reported missing by the War Department since April 21.

An engagement of widespread interest just announced is that of Miss Marion Bourne, daughter of Frederick Gilbert Bourne and the late Mrs. Bourne, of Indian Neck Hall, Oakdale, L. I., to Alexander Benson of Philadelphia.

Miss Bourne and her sister, Miss Marjorie Bourne, are both devotees of outdoor sports, excelling in motoring, horsemanship, and the hunting field. Her father is prominent in the financial world and has made large donations to philanthropy, also being ex-Commodore of the New York Yacht Club.

Mr. Benson is the son of Mrs. Edwin N. Benson of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, and graduated from Princeton, class of '94. He is in the Diplomatic Service of the United States. His brother, Edwin N. Benson, Jr., married Miss Ethel d'L. Weightman.

ST. ANDREW'S BROTHERHOOD'S WORK AMONG SOLDIERS

Organization Does Religious Work as Supplement to Y. M. C. A.'s Care for Material Needs.

IMMEDIATELY after the fateful Good Friday when this nation decided to enter the great war, the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew made plans for a constructive program of Christian work in the army and navy. The sole object of the brotherhood is the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men, especially young men, through the two great mediums—prayer and service—and when the brotherhood entered the camps under the hearty sanction of the Y. M. C. A., it followed the plan which had proved itself through thirty-four years of service. There were no recreation shacks in the brotherhood's plan; the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus were working along this line. The brotherhood's work was to be personal work with men.

In the report of the General War Time Commission of the Churches of Christ in America there is this.

"More important than any specific thing that the Y. M. C. A. has done has been its ability to fire the imagination of the public with the possibilities of Christian service. It has made its program of ministry so simple, so direct, and so appealing that multitudes who have cared little or nothing for the Church hitherto have responded to its appeal and furnished it with resources in men and money which have enabled it to meet the emergency for which other agencies were unprepared.

"But in this very success there lurks a danger. It is not merely the danger of diverting attention from other organizations whose work, if less dramatic, is in its place no less essential—although that is the real danger. It is the danger that in its emphasis upon the Church's agencies men may lose sight of the larger whole, of which each individual agency is a part. Greater than any organization, greater than all organizations put together, is the Church itself, which is the mother of them all, the Church whose hidden life they reveal and of whose spirit they should be the interpreter. When men begin to contrast the Church and the association to the disadvantage of the former they not only show a complete misapprehension of the spirit which animates the association leaders—they are creating an attitude of mind which is full of peril for the future of both."

Without making the pretense of checking this danger, without even acknowledging that it exists, the brotherhood Secretary is directing his work so that it blocks the breach, if there be one. His work is the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men. The "outward and visible sign" of Christ's Kingdom on earth is the Church. To this end is the brotherhood Secretary working, not in the narrower name of denominationalism, but in the name of His Church. The brotherhood Secretary is a consecrated layman; his is a layman's work and is primarily to aid the clergy.

So when the Secretary finds a young man he talks to him about the Church. There is nothing smug here; it is not a platform talk, but a personal heart-to-heart talk with the young man, which usually leads to a meeting between that young man and the chaplain, or, if there be no chaplain, the voluntary chaplain or the soldier pastor. There is no proselyting. The name of the soldier is turned over to the chaplain, commissioned or voluntary, of his own church, and the young man is urged to attend the services of his own church.

He aims to seek out the strong men of the company and squad. By personal interviews he seeks to show to these strong men the need for clean speech and clean living. He aims to have these strong men take up the work among their fellows. In this way groups of personal workers are formed with the strong men at the head, or the "keymen," as they are called in the brotherhood plan. The denomination of the keymen is not essential. The chief essential is that they are strong men who will undertake to set a real example and will help their "bunkies."

Whether or not one man, with the personal worker group plan, could go into one of our camps and make his influence sufficiently felt to reorganize the whole moral and spiritual tone of 40,000 men was a question that seemed to have a negative answer. But it has been conclusively shown that it can be done. In one of the great camps alone there were a full hundred personal worker groups organized by one brotherhood secretary through the aid of the keymen he found among the enlisted men of the ranks. He has since left the camp, and after several weeks the groups not only remain intact but have taken on numbers.

The purpose of the brotherhood is to add to the Y. M. C. A. work, not to duplicate it. Most of the brotherhood secretaries wear the Y. M. C. A. uniform, and are regularly attached to the Y. M. C. A. staff. But no part of the brotherhood program provides for the material welfare of the men, except as it aids some other agency. A brotherhood secretary will gladly aid the distribution of Red Cross articles, or will help in any part of the Y. M. C. A. program. But his program is religious, governed by the two great rules, prayer and service.

His work is to meet men, to come to know them and to bring them to the Church. His whole initiative energy is concentrated on that one object, and it is this concentration, combined with the calibre of the men the brotherhood has put in the field, which has won favor from the Y. M. C. A. leaders. The plan has worked in this country, so now it is being carried to France. Franklin S. Edmonds of Philadelphia, General Secretary of the brotherhood, is in France making a special study for the Y. M. C. A. of recreational resort facilities. He is also making plans for the extension of the Brotherhood work overseas.

The brotherhood secretaries are all laymen. They have given up their various occupations for a period of months or the period of the war. Their average age is well above 40. All of them have done a great deal of parish and community work before going into the camps. Only men with proved experience are accepted for the brotherhood work. Most of them have been out-and-out business men, and their striking success in the field has been due to the fact they have applied business principles of getting along with men to their work in the camps. This is true in a large sense of all welfare workers in the camps. The business man who has gone into the camps to do religious or social work has no dogma to propagate, no pet theories to spill on what he thinks is fertile ground; he has gone to the camps to serve, and his success is measured in that service.

The chief work of the brotherhood Secretary is to form groups of personal workers. To say these groups are interdenominational is hardly the right use of the word, as denominationalism does not enter into the work of the groups. The group leader may be an Episcopalian, a Methodist, Presbyterian, and the like—but the thing that counts is his earnestness and his ability as a group leader. Each group governs itself and plans its own work. Some groups devote their energy to building up the tone of the barracks life. The group can do this better than the brotherhood secretary or any other outside worker—in fact, the group can do many things better than the welfare worker for apparent reasons.

The work of the brotherhood does not aim at a statistical show, nor is it for that organization's edification, but rather is it to give to the individual soldier something he may have and know, something that he may turn to in his hour of most pressing need and be lifted up by it. What better is there to give a man than the purpose and privilege of prayer? What is there which will comfort him more? When a man has learned to win and know his own soul nothing else matters much. He may be brought face to face with many horrors, and in the end find death. But he will face them like a man, and feel a lot of satisfaction in the facing. Lieutenant Alcide Picard of the French Army, who has talked to the men in most of the camps in this country, says there are no atheists in the front-line trenches. "The soldier there may not know so much about churches, but he does know religion with a capital R," says Lieutenant Picard.

Here is the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. By service and prayer it is endeavoring to spread Christ's kingdom among the men in the army, navy, and Marine Corps. Its message is clean speech and clean living. Its slogan is "get your brother." It encourages men to go to church regularly, to the church in which they were baptized. Its creed is found in the strong, simple words of St. Andrew's Collect:

"Almighty God, Who didst give such grace unto Thy holy Apostle, St. Andrew, that he readily obeyed the calling of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, and followed Him without delay, grant unto us all that we, being called by Thy Holy Word, may forthwith give up ourselves obediently to fulfill Thy holy commandments, through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

AMERICA SENDING MILK TO FRANCE

ONE of the greatest sources of suffering in France has been lack of milk. The causes for this lack are manifold. In many instances the Germans slaughtered cows for beef whose greater value lay in their milk; in other instances the Government of France requisitioned the animals for army use, and in still others the farmers found themselves forced to kill their cattle on account of the shortage of pasture and fodder.

All in all there have been lost to the people of France about 2,000,000 cows, and the main source of maintenance of infants and children, of the crippled and the wounded, the sick and tubercular, lies in milk. At present the death rate of children in France is from 58 to 98 per cent. The number of wounded and crippled needs no repetition here. The increase in the ranks of the tubercular is appalling. Outside Belgium, perhaps, there is no other country which has so greatly succumbed to this disease.

The supply of milk in France has been depleted at least 16 per cent. Under present conditions infants must take vegetable stews as a food substitute. What this means to their health and their growth the mortality figures show. Wounded soldiers get heavy soups, which are well-nigh fatal in their effects. The tubercular of France have almost been forgotten. Milk has become a luxury far beyond the reach of the majority of them.

In order to do something to meet this situation and to conserve the milk they have, the French Government is taking vigorous measures. Great care is devoted to the protection of milch cows. From bombarded towns, under military escort, two or three at a time are led back to places of safety. Farmers are urged to make all sacrifices possible to provide proper feed for them. Within Paris a herd of cows is kept under civic care. Government restriction now forbids the serving of milk or cream for any purpose in restaurants, hotels, or public eating places after 9 o'clock in the morning. In private homes, rich or poor, milk is given only to young children and the sick. Milk in Paris costs 32 cents a quart, when it can be bought.

It was in a desire to do something to change these conditions that Mrs. Warren McConihe and Miss Josephine Osborne organized the Free Milk for France Fund. Mrs. McConihe had seen the soldiers suffering greatly for want of milk, she had seen them grow feverish under the influence of heavier foods. She had seen the Belgian and French refugees almost starved for lack of milk. Upon her return to this country she found that America had enough milk to send some across. Because it requires less shipping space, she chose powdered milk. It is scientifically prepared by subjecting fresh, pure, full-creamed milk to a rapid evaporating process, which preserves the nutritive solids and keeps without ice for months.

The milk when prepared costs about 13 cents a quart. There is no other cost. The Government of France has taken over the details of transportation. It is the aim of the organization to send one ton of milk a day. All that is necessary is to mix with hot water. The milk in this form has been recommended even for home use by Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, State Health Commissioner; Dr. S. Josephine Baker of the Child Hygiene Bureau, and Dr. Charles G. Kerley, a child specialist. At a cost of $1,100 a ton of dried milk is sent across, enough to feed 8,400 babies or wounded soldiers or tubercular patients; $52 will send 100 pounds of dry milk or 400 quarts of liquid; $5.20 will send ten pounds, or forty quarts, and 13 cents will send one quart.

The aim of the Free Milk for France organization is to have the nation as a whole respond to its work. Branches are being organized all over the country. The headquarters of the fund is at 675 Fifth Avenue.

For Wounded Soldiers

THE Militia of Mercy, of which Mrs. William H. Truesdale is President, has added to its work the making of convalescents' shirts and other hospital equipment for the wounded Americans who are being sent home. Donations of odd pieces of cretonne and chintz are solicited. The headquarters are at 59 East Thirty-fourth Street. Mrs. James R. McKee, daughter of the late President Benjamin Harrison, is Treasurer, and the depository is the Harriman National Bank.

SUGAR RATION AND PRICE OF CANDIES

Mary Elizabeth Says Confectioners Need Charge No More—New Order Meets With Compliance.

THE 80 per cent. sugar ration to manufacturers, announced by the Food Administration as effective May 15, need cause no hardship to confectioners.

What is of more interest to the general public, it need cause no increase in the retail price of candy.

So says Mary Elizabeth, candy manufacturer. It is quite possible, she adds, by careful management and balancing of ingredients, to keep up the candy supply and to keep down prices, without deviating in the slightest degree from the regulations of the sugar ration. As a matter of fact, candy makers have been practically on an 80 per cent. ration since the first of the year. It has been voluntary; but it has been a ration. Now it is to be voluntary no longer, but, whether it rests on necessity or free-will, it is nothing the public or manufacturer need lament. And in talking with other confectioners, as well, one meets with the most cheerful acceptance of the Government's order.

"I don't think that the 80 per cent. allowance is a bit too stringent," said Mary Elizabeth, "as a matter of fact, it seems to me that it is scarcely stringent enough. But that is not for me to say. What I know is that the ration is not a hardship in any way to the manufacturer, and that there is no reason why it should cause price increase.

"In adjusting their output to the 80 per cent. ration, it is necessary for manufacturers to change their recipes, make new arrangements, balance greater expense here with less expense there. That means a good deal of experiment, and in making these experiments it stands to reason that there may be some initial loss before the matter is properly worked out. But once it is worked out, there is no cause to complain—or to raise prices, I know that, because I have made those experiments myself.

"In the first place, there is honey, and there is maple sugar. These are expensive substitutes for sugar. Maple sugar now costs 24 cents a pound. The last honey 'crop' was 16 cents a pound; I don't know what the new supply will be. Compared with sugar at 8 cents, this is a tremendous increase, and if such substitution had to be general, the confectioner must raise his prices a great deal or make no money at all. The point is, however, that other substitutes or 'extenders' are cheaper. There is a cereal syrup that costs just about as much as sugar; it is only three-fourths as sweet, but it can be used with sugar, as what is called an 'extender,' to great advantage. Corn syrup is cheaper than sugar and is an excellent extender. It doesn't really sweeten; you can't use it alone; but with sugar or some sweet substitute, corn syrup, which is cheap, works in very well. The trouble here will be, that a good deal of cheap candy always has been made with corn syrup in fairly large quantities, so that there is going to be need for a good deal of readjustment with low-grade candy here.

"Then there are fruit candies. Fruits cost a good deal, to be sure, but a few dried fruits will save a great deal of sugar, and some of these fruit candies can be made with no sugar at all. The same is true of nuts. Many kinds of candy can and will be made with nuts, the prices of which vary greatly. Chocolate is plentiful and has not increased in price. It takes very little sugar to sweeten chocolate, and there is enough so that one may eat all he wants. Of course, chocolate is not cheap; but the point is that it has not gone up in price as much as the other things.

"Now, with wise discrimination, the candy manufacturer can meet a 20 per cent. decrease from his normal supply of sugar with no financial loss. It is a matter of balance. He must use honey here—very well, use corn syrup there. Twenty per cent. is not a great deal, after all.

"It is true that there may be a slight average increase in the cost, say, of some kinds of candy. What used to cost 60 cents may cost 61 or 61½ cents. But no one is going to raise the cost of candy 1 or 2 cents a pound. What I mean is that the rationing offers no possible justification to a manufacturer for raising the price of candy 10 or 20 cents a pound.

"I think the ration plan is excellent. It is not drastic. The sugar shortage will exist as long as there are battlefields where there used to be fields of sugar beets. There cannot be enough sugar to meet normal demands while the war lasts.

"The voluntary rationing asked of housewives is more stringent than that imposed upon candy makers. Housewives are now being asked to use only three-fourths of a pound of sugar a week per person. That means only sugar for coffee and cereal. It is harder to get along on a ration like that than for the manufacturer to cut down his use 20 per cent.

"The trouble is that more candy is sold now than ever before. I think the household sugar ration ought to include sugar candy.

"But you can't get away from the fact that people need sweets. Last Summer I went down to Washington and talked with Mr. Hoover and Dr. Wilbur and Dr. Taylor about candy and the candy business. I am a candy manufacturer, and I wanted to know what I ought to do. I got hold of two important facts as the result of that journey. First, people need sweets. Second, it is all right to eat candy if it isn't sugar candy; honey, molasses, maple sugar, fruits, nuts, raisins, chocolate, all make delicious candy, and corn and other cereal syrups can be used to ease the sugar supply. There is not a very large supply of honey and maple syrup in the country, but there is plenty for the people who can afford to pay for it. Leave the sugar for the poor man; he is the man who is building ships and making munitions, and he needs sweets and can't pay much for them.

"Certainly we ought to do everything the Food Administration asks, even if it does cause hardship now and then, and even if we do think we see inconsistencies here and there. The Food Administration can't do everything all at once, but it is doing a very great deal. It takes us a long time to get organized, and what every individual woman ought to learn is that she can do her biggest service right in her own home, or her own sphere, whatever it is. That is better than rushing off trying to get a war job."

Charles Gleason, Vice President of the Maillard Chocolate Company, who is in charge of the business here during Mr. Maillard's absence in France, was emphatic in his expression of the company's wish to co-operate with the Government in every way.

"We are working with the people in Washington," he said, "in every possible way. We don't always realize just why this or that rule is necessary, but they know more about it than we do. We are with the Government in this."

In the Schrafft stores it was explained that an 80 per cent. ration had really been in existence for a long time, and that the number of sugarless candies, already large, was constantly being increased, with the result of cutting the consumption of sugar down to a minimum.

The official rationing will put manufacturers of foodstuffs using sugar, with the exception of a small preferred class, on an allowance of 80 per cent. of their supply prior to Nov. 1, 1917. Firms which started business or expanded their plants after that date will be cut down to 50 per cent., and those that have begun or increased production since April 1, 1918, will be cut off altogether.

CAMOUFLAGE COURSE FOR N. Y. SOLDIERS

THE importance of camouflage, both as an item in the training of America's legions and as an effective means toward whipping the Germans, was the subject of a communication which Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan lately addressed to the 32,000 New York State soldiers now approaching the last phase of preparation for embarkation. The General's memorandum was issued just at the start of a camouflage course which was made obligatory for every officer and enlisted man on duty in the big tented city at Spartanburg, S. C. Lieutenant Linwood P. Ames was placed in charge as instructor.

Prior to the inauguration of the divisional course, Lieutenant Ames, then a Sergeant in the Divisional Headquarters Troop, had attracted the favorable notice of headquarters because of his feats in camouflage. Under his direction all sorts of "stunts" were put through. A "dead horse" was rigged up, which afforded concealment for three expert riflemen; a badly battered "tree stump" sprang into being, to do its bit as a listening post; and, finally, a huge canvas tent was erected, under brush and earth, till it looked exactly like a hill, but a hill that gave effective concealment to 400 sharpshooters.

These samples of camouflage aroused great interest among the men. General O'Ryan was quick to note the effect of the work and decided to launch a course in camouflage—something that, in the case of other divisions, has generally been left for overseas training.

"The use of the word camouflage," said General O'Ryan, "in relation to deception of the enemy, may be new, but the art itself is old and has been employed to advantage in other wars. Efficiency in the art of camouflage means the saving of life, and of guns and other military matériel which might otherwise be destroyed, and the ability to detect enemy camouflage.

"The first distinct impression which I desire the officers and men of this division to receive and retain, in relation to this subject of camouflage, is that aspect of the subject which has to do with nature itself. With this view of camouflage we shall hear no more of the criticism that the subject is relatively unimportant, on the theory that it has no application to warfare of mobility. Those who make such comment see in camouflage only a means of successfully molding and 'planting' the remains of a dead horse, with a view to furnishing cover for some sniper to kill a man or two of the enemy's forces.

"That form of camouflage which is wholly artificial has been the subject of remarkable development during the present war, due to the peculiar conditions affecting the welfare of fixed positions, and many things have been successfully done, some of them more or less inconsequential, because there has been time for adequate preparation. The value of camouflage, however, bears a distinct relation to its approximation to nature.

"The ideal camouflage is 'nature's camouflage'—that is to say, features or idiosyncrasies of the terrain which may be availed of for particular tactical purposes. The next most effective form is a combination of artificial camouflage with some artificial extension of the terrain when the terrain, in unaltered form, would be insufficient for the particular purpose. The least effective, although perhaps the most interesting form of camouflage, is that which is wholly artificial. This is true because camouflage, to aid the operations or movements of considerable forces, must be provided on a huge scale, and, consequently, to provide artificial camouflage to such an extent would involve materials, time and labor in prohibitive measure. Furthermore, artificial camouflage deteriorates more rapidly than natural camouflage and is more readily detected by the enemy.

"From the foregoing it will be seen that the most important class of camouflage activity might be termed tactical camouflage. With this conception in mind, it will be seen that the subject bears an intimate and important relation to mobile warfare and, accordingly, a study of the principles of camouflage will throw an illuminating light upon the problems of the tactical dispositions of troops in open warfare. As troop movements resolve themselves into troop dispositions and the occupation of positions, natural camouflage should be promptly augmented by artificial camouflage, and, when positions become more or less permanent, artificial camouflage should be resorted to in its fullest measure.

"In view of this, the commanding officer of each regiment and similar unit will carefully select and designate a regimental camouflage officer. In like manner, an officer will be selected and designated by each battalion and company commander, whose duty it will be to devote special time and study to the work, and who will confer with other camouflage officers of their own and other units in relation to the work."

An Unusual Six

Built Extra Strong—$1250

THE latest Mitchells have been built to meet export requirements. Many of them go to foreign countries where roads are rough and difficult. So these new cars are unique in their sturdiness and strength.

To build these cars, many experts in endurance have been added to the Mitchell staff. They have studied every part, fixing new tests and new standards. To guard against any possible faults, they have doubled the inspections.

On American roads these new-grade cars should render lifetime service.

The Finest $1250 Six

It is big, roomy and impressive, with a 124-inch wheelbase. The motor is the latest type of a 40-horsepower Six.

The rear springs are shock-absorbing. The equipment is extra-complete. Every part is built to the new Mitchell standards.

No other Six in the $1250 field offers anywhere near so much.

16 New-Style Bodies

Exquisite Designing

The latest Mitchell bodies are built in their own new body plant. A famous designer has been placed in charge.

These models are distinguished. They are long and low and roomy. In any crowd of fine cars they will show distinction.

Yet both sizes of Mitchells this year undersell any comparable cars. Last year's prices have not been advanced.

The reason is efficiency methods. Mitchell cars are built complete under scientific methods. Years have been spent in the Mitchell plant to eliminate all waste.

Come and see what extra values these methods have produced. You will be surprised.

DUTY OF ALIENS LIVING IN AMERICA

Federal Judge's Concise Statement of Their Obligations and Responsibilities While We Are at War

In view of the importance of instructing foreign residents as to their duties and obligations to this country in wartime, the Commissioner of Naturalization, Department of Labor, has requested publication of the address delivered at the time of our entry into the war to applicants for naturalization in the Federal Court at Philadelphia, by Circuit Judge Joseph Buffington. It is regarded by the Government as a model statement for the perusal of aliens.

TODAY there are 14,500,000 of men in America of foreign birth; there are 14,000,000 the children of those of foreign birth. A census recently taken of a plant in this State shows 23,000 workmen of foreign birth. Of these 10,000 came from the Central Powers. Of that 10,000, 1,400 are naturalized citizens. These facts and figures may startle those who do not know the foreign born, but to those of us who know them they cause no alarm. Almost a quarter of the foreign born who come to the United States have latterly made Pennsylvania their home. William Penn was the first founder who brought to his colony men of different races. These different races have helped build up this State, they have bought homes in it, have their children in our schools, and Pennsylvania knows the foreign born, believes in the foreign born, and today we have 1,500,000 of them among us.

In the twenty-five years I have been a United States Judge I have been brought, through these naturalization courts, into close touch with the foreign born, have learned to understand them, have believed in them, and have always said that when war faced us these foreign-born men would prove themselves Americans.

The crux is not the fact of the hyphen, but whether the man's heart is at the American end of the hyphen.

I have signed the decrees making thousands and thousands of them citizens, and I am always glad when one of them comes to me and tells me I made him a citizen. In these anxious times, when there are fears among our foreign-born citizens of internment or imprisonment or some hardship, these men have been coming to me for advice; and I have been able to help them, and, because I found it did help them, I thought it right that I should just now give a general message of cheer and counsel, of warning and advice, to our Pennsylvania foreign-born people. And so I have asked the District Judge to let me come into his court today and admit you to citizenship, and I am going, through you, to give a message to the thousands and thousands of the foreign born in Pennsylvania.

In the first place, I want to say that I have made it my duty to find out what our Government would do in case of war, and whether it would follow the example of the nations abroad, and would intern men who had at one time been citizens of countries at war with us. I am glad to say to you that the Government has no purpose to intern any men, and that any man who is interned will intern himself, by proving that the Government ought to intern him. The Government is going to start out with trusting and believing in all who are living here, and there will be no interning or depriving any foreign-born man of any country of his liberty so long as that man is truly loyal to America.

And I want to tell you, further, that our Government feels very strongly that any ill-will or bad treatment by any American citizen toward any foreign-born man simply because he was born in a country with which America is at war would be a serious blot upon the good name of America. I am glad to give this assurance to our foreign-born people, and to let every man who does no wrong to the Government know that the Government will not imprison or disturb him. So much for the good-will of the Government toward them.

And how about their good-will toward the Government? This leads me to give a further message of caution and friendly advice to those who may have a bad will toward our Government or who are listening to bad advice, or who for any reason are becoming disloyal to America, or turning their faces away from her. My advice to such men and women is to stop, look, and listen before they go further; for in times like these such a course cannot but lead to a sorry end. War is the dividing line. Remember, what was only foolish and unwise in word and deed last week, in peace, may be treason when war comes. Remember, when war comes, no man can serve two masters. As of old the message comes, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."

There is no such thing as half treason. Any treason is all treason. And let no foreign-born man who is today in the United States comfort himself that, because he has not become a naturalized citizen, he owes no allegiance to the United States and that he cannot be punished for treason to the United States. That is not the case, and it is well for us all—whether native born, naturalized, or unnaturalized—to understand just where we each stand with relation to the Government in the crime of treason. The highest duty of any Government is self-protection. Therefore treason against a Government, because it strikes at the life of the Government, is the highest form of crime. Let me state to you the law:

1. Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States, levies war against them or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason.

2. Whoever is convicted of treason shall suffer death; or at the discretion of the court shall be imprisoned not less than five years and fined not less than $10,000, to be levied on and collected out of any or all his property, real and personal, of which he was the owner at the time of committing such treason, any sale or conveyance to the contrary notwithstanding; and every person so convicted of treason shall moreover be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

And every one who owes allegiance to the Government can be guilty of treason; the native born man because he was born here; the naturalized man because he took an oath of allegiance; the unnaturalized or alien man because he lives here for the time being. Every one knows the native born and the naturalized man can be guilty of treason, but let me read you from the book itself what the Supreme Court at Washington says about the alien who stays in the country in time of war: "The alien, whilst domiciled in the country, owes a local and temporary allegiance, which continues during the period of his residence," says that court, and it follows this by quoting and adopting the broad principle stated by Daniel Webster when Secretary of State:

"Independently of a residence with intention to continue such residence, independently of any domiciliation, independently of the taking of any oath of allegiance or of renouncing any former allegiance, it is well known that, by the public law, an alien or a stranger born, for so long a time as he continues within the dominions of a foreign Government, owes obedience to the laws of that Government, and may be punished for treason or other crimes as a native-born subject might be, unless his case is varied by some treaty stipulation."

My advice, therefore, to every foreign-born man and woman who is staying in the United States today is to keep clear of any disloyalty; keep clear of any one who counsels or advises it. Indeed, any one, native, naturalized, or alien, who knows of such disloyal plans, purposes, or schemes is already on dangerous ground, although he may not himself have done a thing; for as your friend I should tell you that there is not only treason which consists of overt acts, but there is a lesser treason which consists in knowing of treason by others against the United States and not making it known.

Let me make that very plain, for it may save some people trouble. If a man or woman knows of treason against the United States and keeps it to himself, it is like receiving stolen goods. So it is with treason; for to conceal treason is to commit treason. Now, here is what the law provides about this lesser treason, or "misprision of treason," as it is called, and it applies to all persons living in the United States, whether native born, naturalized, or not naturalized, for they all owe allegiance.

3. Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States, and having knowledge of the commission of any treason against them, conceals, and does not, as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the President or to some Judge of the United States, or to the Governor or to some Judge or Justice of a particular State, is guilty of misprision of treason and shall be imprisoned not more than seven years and fined not more than $1,000.

So in these times the safe path for native born, naturalized, and the alien is not only to avoid treason one's self, but, if one learns of it, either to go in person or write some of the officers named in this statute and tell him what one knows.

It is not necessary for me to tell you the many forms treason may take, for treason will always find a hundred different secret ways in which it can give aid and sympathy to the enemy. But right can take but one plain course. Be loyal, true, straight, and square to the Government and you will be sure you are not committing treason. I am not trying to tell people how near they can approach the line of treason without crossing it. I am telling them how far they can keep from the line by simply being loyal to the flag and America.

When a man is driving along a precipice he tries to drive as far away from the edge as he can. My advice to every foreign-born man who comes to me will be: Put a flag at your door, another on your coat, and above all keep one in your heart. If you do, you will stand foursquare as countrymen of Washington and Lincoln, and no nation has ever loved any leader, be he King or Kaiser, Sultan or Czar, as all nations today love George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. In following their loyal footsteps no man of any race can go astray.

NOVEL CASES IN COURTS

Community Chautauquas, Inc., owns and gives that form of entertainment known as Chautauqua, and made a large number of contracts to give such entertainments in Vermont during the Summer of 1917. After so doing, the Board of Health of Vermont made an order prohibiting the holding of fairs, Chautauquas, &c., until further notice. The reason of the order was the prevention of the spread of infantile paralysis, then prevalent, on the ground that large general gatherings of people tend to the spread of that disease. The validity of this order was passed upon in the case of Community Chautauquas, Inc., v. Charles S. Caverly et al., 244 Federal Reporter, 893.

The primary question presented was whether the professional opinion of the board, (a board of doctors,) honestly exercised, should be overturned by the court on the ground of its unreasonableness. In considering this question the court said: "It is the duty of the court to examine into the facts of every case, and, if a responsible, honest, and presumably reasonable body of professional opinion is found on the side of the regulation, it is the duty of the court to uphold it, even though the Chancellor should entertain the view of professional dissidents."

The constitutionality of the order was attacked on the ground that its practical effect, as assumed by the parties, was to terminate the contracts which the plaintiff had made for these entertainments. The court disposed of this objection by saying: "That the prevention of disease, or its spread, by any means based on responsible medical opinion, is a competent and constitutional exercise of police power, is a proposition so plain as scarcely to require citation." It was accordingly held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief.

Freezing is a personal injury which may be caused by "accident," within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation act of Minnesota, according to the view of the Supreme Court of the State, expressed by Commissioner Dibell in the case of State v. District Court of St. Louis County, 164 Northwestern Reporter, 585. One Joe Niemi was employed as a swamper in the northern part of the State, his duties requiring him to cut and handle timber, and to construct roads for swamping. He used an axe, and in handling the timber his hands were continuously exposed to snow and extreme cold. Due to the fact that the building of fires was not allowed, there were no facilities for warming, and as a result his hand was frozen to such an extent as to necessitate amputation of one thumb.

It is not questioned that the employe received his injury in the course of his employment. It is, however, contended that it did not arise out of his employment. The court holds, however, that the evidence fairly supports the view that "the character of the employe's work subjected him to a risk of freezing not shared by the generality of the community, and sustains the finding that the freezing arose out of the employment."

AN APPEAL

To the Heart of Every Citizen in the United States

It is again Springtime in the History of Mankind

While militarism and despotism are being plowed under as fertilizers on the fields of the Future, Democracy cultivates flowers of Service and Sacrifice that call for immediate attention and most tender care.

The finest qualities of one's being are drawn out during Red Cross work.

It is a great privilege to be able to give. It is a far greater joy to be able to give willingly.

In the depth of your heart is implanted a seed of love for your fellow-being, which craves for sunshine.

Your noblest feelings, if not expressed in deeds, are like perfumes, sealed up in bottles, or like precious metals entombed in mines.

That Red Symbol, when clearly visualized, touches and unites the very hearts of all humane beings just as the small postage stamp, when liberated for its mission, grips and joins the friendly arms of all civilized nations.

The normal temperature of human blood is the same in the North and South as in the East or West.

The flawless gem is just as perfect in a small as in a large size.

There is only one standard for everything Genuine.

Eight carat gold rings when melted into a bar don't raise their standard to fourteen.

A dollar of the poor, when it stands for all one can give, weighs on the scale of our Divine Assayer more than one thousand of the rich, who can afford to give ten thousand.

The former represents one hundred per cent. of heart quality, while the latter only ten per cent.

The Keynote of the Red Cross symphony you will find in your heart.

Sound it lovingly, and if your response is genuine, your contribution will be generous.

Cordially yours,

Peter Gouled

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

STRAND—"Resurrection," adapted from Tolstoy's novel, with Pauline Frederick.

RIVOLI—"Old Wives for New," based on David Graham Phillips's novel; produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

RIALTO—"De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge.

BROADWAY—"A Soul for Sale," with Dorothy Phillips.

LYRIC—"Pershing's Crusaders," Government war film, (beginning Tuesday evening.)

BELMONT—Dr. Leonard S. Sugden's "The Lure of Alaska," Prizma natural color pictures, (beginning Tuesday evening.)

FORTY-FOURTH STREET—D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World."

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—"Mr. Fix-It," with Douglas Fairbanks.

Of this week's abundant screen offerings, the most important is "Pershing's Crusaders," which is the first of a series of Government films to be exhibited under the general title "Following the Flag to France," for the purpose of instructing American citizens about the war and interpreting it to them. The pictures of the first installment were made in this country and abroad by photographers attached to the United States Signal Corps and the Navy, and they illustrate America's participation in the war from many points of view. There are scenes of American soldiers going into the first line trenches, General Pershing and Secretary of War Baker inspecting the forces and preparations in France, the first German prisoners captured by troops of the United States, and many other details of American activity abroad.

Spectators will also see what America is doing over here, some of the subjects of the film being the building of cantonments, the construction and launching of ships, the manufacture of guns and projectiles, the development of the army and navy, the production of airplanes, and the tapping of American resources in forest, field, and mine.

"Pershing's Crusaders" will be exhibited for the Government by the recently formed Liberty Film Committee, of which the officers are Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, Chairman; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Vice Chairman; Clarence H. Mackay, Treasurer; Frederic R. Coudert, Honorary Secretary, and Mrs. Anne Shingleur, Executive Secretary. All of the profit from the exhibition of the film will be devoted to the American Army and Navy Fund and the French War Relief.

The committee hopes to have Secretary Baker present to make an address on the opening night, and has already received the following message from the President:

"Pictures of American troops in the trenches, fighting the battle of human freedom, should be an inspiration to all Americans.

"(Signed) WOODROW WILSON."

Pretentious promises are made for Pauline Frederick's interpretation of the leading character in Tolstoy's famous "Resurrection" and for the graphic representation of scenes in Siberia and other localities brought into the novel. The story of the "Resurrection" is familiar to nearly every one, and many will be interested in its screen presentation at the Strand this week.

With Miss Frederick in the cast are Robert Elliott, John Sainpolis, and Jere Austin.

The fourth installment of the noteworthy Outing-Chester pictures, entitled "Coorial on the Orinoco," is also on the Strand program, as are another chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," showing animals of the night; Smiling Billy Parsons in his latest comedy, "Matching Billy," and the topical review, which includes pictures of American troops in Europe.

On the musical program are Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, who will sing the mad scene from "Lucia," and Arthur Aldridge, singing "Carry On." The Symphony Orchestra will play the overture "Il Guarini," by Gomez.

David Graham Phillips's story about the domestic difficulties growing out of a situation in which a wife who has past her best in age and appearance becomes estranged from a husband still in his heyday, for whom feminine attractions are still strong, affords the basis of the screen version of "Old Wives for New" at the Rivoli this week. The picture was made by Cecil B. De Mille, Artcraft's director general, from a scenario prepared by himself and Jeanie Macpherson. Among those in the cast are Theodore Roberts, Elliott Dexter, Tully Marshall, Gustav Seyffertitz, Florence Vidor, Marcia Manon, Wanda Hawley, and Sylvia Ashton.

The Rivoli Orchestra will play the overture to Thomas's "Mignon"; two pupils of the Luigi Albertieri Ballet School will dance Enderewski's "Minuet" in a setting made by John Wenger; Winifred Marshall will sing the "Shadow Song" from "Dinorah," and Firmin Swinnen and Uda Waldrop will alternate at the organ during the week.

A Fox comedy called "Wild Women and Tame Lions," scenic films, and the Animated Pictorial are also on the program.

"De Luxe Annie" is derived from the play of the same name by Edward Clark, in which Jane Grey appeared on the Broadway stage last season. Its story is that of a woman crook who, with the aid of a male accomplice, is successful in living at society's expense and yet keeping more or less within the law. It is revealed that the woman is not a criminal of her own free will, and an attempt is made to surround her activities with a certain mystery which it is the business of the play to solve.

In the cast with Norma Talmadge are Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, Edwards Davis, and Edna Hunter.

The musical program of the Rialto includes the orchestra playing Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" and the intermezzo from Mascagni's "L'Amico Fritz," Greek Evans singing "A Son of the Desert Am I," by Walter A. Phillips and Arthur Depew, and George Crook at the organ.

The Rialto Animated Magazine, a scenic film, and a Mack Sennet-Paramount comedy, entitled "The Battle Royal," will be shown.

The new film at the Broadway this week, "A Soul For Sale," with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role, is about a young girl who, as the title implies, or rather shouts, sells herself to the highest bidder. The screen play is taken from a story called "Barter," by Evelyn Campbell, which appeared in Snappy Stories. The scenario was written by Elliott J. Clawson.

The cast includes Albert Rosco, William Burees, Harry Dunkenson, Katherine Kirkwood and Joseph Gerard. The picture was directed by Allan Holubar, who was in charge of the production of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

In addition to the featured film at the Broadway, the program will be the Universal Screen Magazine, the Broadway Topical Digest, songs by Helen Rumsey Smith, and music by the women's orchestra under the direction of Caroline B. Nicols.

Dr. Leonard S. Sugden, whose exhibition of Alaskan pictures at the Rialto last year attracted favorable attention, brings what is said to be a new series of views of Alaska to the Belmont Theatre this week, beginning on Tuesday evening. The pictures were made by the Prizma natural color process, which should go far toward putting the beauty and wonder of Alaska on the screen. Also, there are many scenes of excitement, especially that showing Dr. Sugden running the White Horse Rapids on the Yukon River, and the Klondyke Days are represented by a number of specially prepared views. Dr. Sugden, who has been a surgeon of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, a Government pilot on the Yukon River, an explorer, and a big-game hunter, has traveled extensively in Alaska, and has demonstrated high ability in photographing nature under difficult conditions.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" enters upon its eighth successful week at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre with no evidence of loss of interest by the public.

This week's bill at Loew's New York Theatre is:

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Moonshine" tomorrow and Tuesday, Alice Brady in "At the Mercy of Men" tomorrow, Alice Joyce in "The Triumph of the Weak" on Tuesday, Mary Pickford in "Miliss" on Wednesday, Peggy Hyland in "Peg of the Pirates" on Thursday, William Desmond in "Old Hartwell's Club" and Carmel Meyers in "A Broadway Scandal" on Friday, June Elvidge in "The Oldest Law" on Saturday, and Harold Lockwood in "Lend Me Your Name" next Sunday.

Moving-picture producers, actors, authors, exhibitors, and all others affiliated with the film industry are mobilized for the Red Cross drive this week and mean to contribute by and through themselves a large part of the $100,000,000 which the relief organization will raise. Officially the moving-picture interests are united in a working arrangement with the stage, the Allied Theatrical and Moving Picture team having charge of the work. William Fox is the head of this team, and his chief assistants in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx are John Manheimer, William Brandt, and John Wittman.

The team's assigned quota is $500,000, but Mr. Fox and his associates are out to get $1,000,000 from the 1,500,000 whom they expect to reach. Between 6,000 and 7,000 workers will make an active campaign among theatres and restaurants in the city, and a number of special events will be staged, among them a performance at the Strand next Saturday morning. The big wind-up will come with a ball at the Hotel Astor on Saturday night.

The committee's headquarters are in the Subway Central Building at 1,465 Broadway, and the telephone number is Bryant 2600.

Why wait to be solicited for a subscription to the fund? Why not volunteer before being drafted?

Pictures prepared to show how soldiers passing through New York on their way overseas spend their time are being made by the Committee on Public Information in co-operation with the War Camp Community Service and will be distributed throughout the country for the information and encouragement of families and friends back home. The former Earlington Hotel, now operated for the benefit of soldiers, and the late Princeton Club, recently opened for officers under the auspices of the Union League Club and the New York War Camp Community Service, will provide the backgrounds for many of the pictures.

Bill Hart, according to report, is engaged to Miss Margaret Evans of Butte, Mon., whom he met on his recent Liberty Loan tour.

Another item concerning Hart is that the 150th California Infantry, stationed at Camp Kearny, has adopted him as its godfather and styled the members of the organization the "Bill Hart Two-Gun Men." Mr. Hart will entertain the officers of the regiment at a military ball to be given in their honor at Coronado, Cal., in the latter part of the month.

As soon as her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation expires, Pauline Frederick's pictures will be produced by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company and distributed through Goldwyn. Willard Mack, Miss Frederick's husband, has taken charge of Goldwyn's scenario department, so the two will be associated hereafter in their work. Mr. Mack is the author of a number of well-known stage plays, including "Kick In" and "Tiger Rose," and has been writing scenarios for some time.

Goldwyn, by the way, announces that it will double the number of its annual releases, turning out more than fifty photoplays in the next twelve months as against twenty-six in the last. Six productions featuring Geraldine Farrar, eight with Pauline Frederick, eight with Mabel Normand, eight with Mae Marsh, eight with Madge Kennedy, and six picturizations of Rex Beach's novels are promised.

Maurice Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," a screen adaptation of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, is now being made at Fort Lee, N. J., where Mr. Tourneur has a studio. The director's success with "The Whip," another Drury Lane melodrama, and, more recently, with "The Blue Bird," puts a promise into the announcement that arouses expectations.

Some announcements of forthcoming pictures are:

By Paramount—"Uncle Tom's Cabin," with Marguerite Clark as Little Eva and Topsy; "In the Claws of the Hun," "His Own Home Town," and "A Nine o'Clock Town," with Charles Ray; "The Mating of Marcella" and "Tyrant Fear," with Dorothy Dalton; "The White Man's Law" and "The Bravest Way," with Sessue Hayakawa; "Less Than Kin" and "The Firefly of France," with Wallace Reid; "Missing," based upon Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel of the same name, and produced by J. Stuart Blackton; "Love's Conquest," an adaptation of Sardou's "Gismonda," with Lina Cavalieri; "Viviette," based upon William J. Locke's novel, with Vivian Martin; "Her Final Reckoning," founded on Jules Claretie's novel, "Prince Zilah," with Pauline Frederick; "A Desert Wooing," with Enid Bennett.

By Artcraft—"He Comes Up Smiling" and "Say, Young Fellow!" with Douglas Fairbanks; "The Danger Mark," "A Doll's House," and "Heart of the Wilds," with Elsie Ferguson; "Captain Kidd, Jr.," with Mary Pickford; "We Can't Have Everything," with Wanda Hawley.

By Goldwyn—"The Venus Model," with Mabel Normand; "All Woman" and "The Glorious Adventure," with Mae Marsh; "The Service Star" and "The Fair Pretender," with Madge Kennedy; "Social Ambition," with Howard Hickman.

By Vitagraph—"Find the Woman" and "To the Highest Bidder," with Alice Joyce; "The Girl in His House," and "The Man From Brodneys," with Earle Williams; "Baree, Son of Kazan" and "A Gentleman's Agreement," with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman; "The Soap Girl" and "The Rebel," with Gladys Leslie; "Tangled Lives" and "Fiddler's Green," with Harry Morey and Betty Blythe; "A Fight for Millions," with William Duncan.

By World Pictures—"Mandarin's Gold," with Kitty Gordon; "By Hook or Crook," with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley; "The Blood of the Trevors," with Barbara Castleton; "The Power and the Glory," with Madge Evans, Albert Hart, Charley Jackson, and Sheridan Handy; "The Man Hunt," with Ethel Clayton.

By the Sherman Productions Company—"The Light of the Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum and Winifred Kingston; "The Wolf Breed," with Dustin Farnum.

By the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation—"A Romance of the Under World" and "Marriage." By the Marion Davies Film Company—"Cecilia of the Pink Roses." By the Graphic Film Corporation—"When Men Betray," with Stuart Holmes. By De Luxe Pictures—"The Street of Seven Stars," with Doris Kenyon. By American-Mutual—"A Square Deal" and "Impossible Susan," with Margarita Fisher. By Yorke—"Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood. By Pathé—"The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward.

Benjamin Chapin, who put the life of Lincoln on the screen in a serial entitled "The Son of Democracy," has been awarded the degree of Doctor of Literature by the Lincoln Memorial University of Cumberland, W. Va., in recognition of his production.

The historic slave block which, until the recent demolition of the building, stood in the basement of the old Hotel St. Louis in New Orleans, an object of interest to thousands of visitors, and from which, in ante-bellum days, negro slaves were regularly sold at auction, will provide part of the scenery for Paramount's production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Mabel Normand will appear soon in a photoplay produced to promote the sale of thrift stamps.

The Educational Films Corporation's naval picture, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," will be shown privately in the clubrooms of the Architectural League of America in West Fifty-seventh Street on Thursday evening of next week. The film will be exhibited in June for a week or more at some Broadway theatre and then put out for general release.

The Madlaine Traverse Film Corporation, it is announced, is in the process of formation. Miss Traverse expects to produce feature films only.

Word has been received of the safe arrival in England of E. M. Newman, the lecturer and producer of the Newman Travel Pictures, who went abroad with authority from George Creel, of the Committee on Public Information, to make still and moving pictures showing life under war conditions in Great Britain, France, and Italy. Mr. Newman is on the venture at his own expense, and intends to exhibit his pictures, through release by the Educational Films Corporation, commercially, but, because of the probable public value of the results of his work, Mr. Creel provided him with letters to members of the American embassies in the countries to be visited. He expects to be gone five months, and the Educational Films Corporation is planning to release his pictures next Winter.

S. L. Rothapfel, who is in Florida as a Lieutenant of marines in charge of a squad of camera men making pictures for the Government, is reported to have obtained some good results. He will visit the camps at Paris Island and Quantico, returning to New York in about a week.

The National Motion Picture Exposition, under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will open at the Mechanics Building, Boston, on July 13, and continue for a week. The eighth annual convention of the Exhibitors' League will be held simultaneously.

Alberto Bachman, first concert master at the Rivoli, is managing a fund raised by the members of the Rivoli and Rialto Orchestras for the relief of destitute French musicians.

Tallulah Bankhead, who will make her screen bow in "When Men Betray," to be produced by the Graphic Film Corporation, is said to be the daughter of Congressman William B. Bankhead and granddaughter of United States Senator John H. Bankhead, both of Alabama.

Mme. Petrova has engaged Ralph Ince to direct three more of her pictures. Her next production will be "Tempered Steel," by George Middleton.

Headed by Louise Huff, the young women around the Lasky Studio in Hollywood, have organized a Joan of Arc Society to assist charitable organizations in the raising of funds. All the Paramount and Artcraft players have enlisted their services.

Those who missed the item in the daily news recently may be interested to learn that at least thirty-seven reels of the Willard-Johnson prizefight in Cuba have been burned in Utica, N. Y., by order of the United States Marshal. After the fight the Government prohibited the importation of the pictures into the United States, so the original films were taken to Canada by promoters who sought to evade the law by projecting the pictures across the boundary line, having them reproduced by a camera on this side. The authorities seized the copies, however, and a long legal battle followed, which ended in the decision of the courts that the pictures had been brought into America illegally and must be destroyed.

James K. Hackett is one of the latest recruits for the motion picture, according to report.

The Brooklyn Museum's fourth exhibition of moving pictures for young people will be given tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The program includes: The fourth episode of "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," "Sadie Goes to Heaven," with Little Mary McAllister; "Making an Aviator," "The Making of a Newspaper," "Animal Friends," "What a Careless Hunter in the Woods May Do," "Miracles in Mud; Mother's Liberty Bond."

John Barrymore, who retired from the screen some time ago after appearing in a number of Paramount pictures, has signed a contract to become a Paramount star again, it is announced. His first picture will be Augustus Thomas's "On the Quiet," in which William Collier was seen on the stage some years ago. Chester Withey, who has been associated with D. W. Griffith, has been engaged to direct Mr. Barrymore's productions, and is now on his way to New York from California.

THE MOVIES ARE FORTY.

FORTY years ago there were no moving pictures, nor anything suggestive of them. In about 1872 Eadweard Muybridge, a California photographer, began experiments in instantaneous photography with the idea of taking still pictures of animals in motion. He did not dream of moving pictures, his purpose being to record through the camera the different positions of a running horse so that they might be studied. His interest was scientific and his work appealed to scientific men. The University of Pennsylvania provided him with funds said to have amounted to $40,000, and he spent a number of years developing his idea.

Maurice Tourneur thus describes in Variety how the California photographer achieved his first practical results.

"Muybridge built a shed which was painted black and was 120 feet long. Opposite the shed he constructed a camera house with twenty-four cameras, each having a lens three inches in diameter. In front of these cameras a horse galloped. The black shed was the background. The cameras, operated first by strings which were broken by the horse's progress, caught successive exposures. Later a motor operated the cameras. Thus a series of successive movement pictures was obtained. Later the work was taken up by M. Marey of Paris, who utilized a sensitized film and was able to use a single camera."

It is said that Muybridge made his first successful pictures on May 15, 1878, at the Leland Stanford race track at Oakland, Cal., which would make moving pictures forty years old last Saturday. M. Tourneur, a worthy successor of the inventor in the development of the photography of motion, has suggested that something be done to honor his memory, and it is probable that a definite plan will be launched before long.

But, although Muybridge carried his work to the point of exhibiting pictures of animals, birds, and men in action on the screen as early as 1880 and contributed one of the big new things to the Chicago Exposition in 1893, his invention was not made commercially practicable until the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin of the House of Prayer in Newark, about 1887, produced a film flexible and strong enough to be run from a reel. The minister's work made the modern moving picture possible.

As is often the case with inventors, Mr. Goodwin was but poorly rewarded. He died in 1900 without having won either wealth or fame. His patents, however, were placed in the hands of the Ansco Company, which sued the Eastman Kodak Company for infringement, and after long continued litigation, the Eastman Company in 1913 settled for a large sum, said to have amounted to several million dollars. Mr. Goodwin's widow and two adopted children shared in this delayed remuneration. The patents have now expired and are public property.

Thomas A. Edison, the Eastman Kodak Company, Lumière, and many others made important contributions from time to time to the development of moving pictures, perhaps the most notable of them being the kinetoscope brought out by Edison in 1893. The development is still going on, and promises to continue as new minds become devoted to the screen.

The progress today is more noticeably in the direction of improving the moving picture play than in adding to the already highly perfected technique of taking and projecting pictures. In the beginning the moving picture play was not thought of, the first pictures being photographic representations of ordinary life. The idea of telling a story by means of pictures came next, but early attempts at this were confined to slap-stick comedy. Then producers turned to serious work and sought to make screen plays that should have a real dramatic and spectacular value, and some of them sometimes have succeeded tremendously.

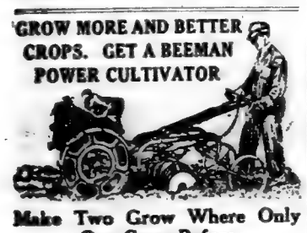
GROW MORE AND BETTER CROPS. GET A BEEMAN POWER CULTIVATOR



Make Two Grow Where Only One Grew Before

Close cultivation means more and better crops. Let the little Beeman Cultivator make two potatoes, two ears of corn or two onions grow where only one will grow without its aid. It cultivates faster and better than you can do it any other way. It goes astride narrow-rowed crops and between the rows on wide-rowed crops. Saves money, time and labor; does the work of ten men. It also plows, harrows, and hauls loads. Does other work that can be done by a horse. You can sell your horse if you buy the Beeman.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

STRAND—"Resurrection," adapted from Tolstoy's novel, with Pauline Frederick.

RIVOLI—"Old Wives for New," based on David Graham Phillips's novel; produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

RIALTO—"De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge.

BROADWAY—"A Soul for Sale," with Dorothy Phillips.

BELMONT—Dr. Leonard S. Sugden's "The Lure of Alaska," Prizma natural color pictures, (beginning Tuesday evening.)

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—"Mr. Fix-It," with Douglas Fairbanks.

OF this week's abundant screen offerings, the most important is "Pershing's Crusaders," which is the first of a series of Government films to be exhibited under the general title "Following the Flag to France," for the purpose of instructing American citizens about the war and interpreting it to them. The pictures of the first installment were made in this country and abroad by photographers attached to the United States Signal Corps and the Navy, and they illustrate America's participation in the war from many points of view. There are scenes of American soldiers going into the first line trenches, General Pershing and Secretary of War Baker inspecting the forces and preparations in France, the first German prisoners captured by troops of the United States, and many other details of American activity abroad.

Spectators will also see what America is doing over here, some of the subjects of the film being the building of cantonments, the construction and launching of ships, the manufacture of guns and projectiles, the development of the army and navy, the production of airplanes, and the tapping of American resources in forest, field, and mine.

"Pershing's Crusaders" will be exhibited for the Government by the recently formed Liberty Film Committee, of which the officers are Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, Chairman; Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Vice Chairman; Clarence H. Mackay, Treasurer; Frederic R. Coudert, Honorary Secretary, and Mrs. Anne Shingleur, Executive Secretary. All of the profit from the exhibition of the film will be devoted to the American Army and Navy Fund and the French War Relief.

The committee hopes to have Secretary Baker present to make an address on the opening night, and has already received the following message from the President:

"Pictures of American troops in the trenches, fighting the battle of human freedom, should be an inspiration to all Americans.

"(Signed) WOODROW WILSON."

Pretentious promises are made for Pauline Frederick's interpretation of the leading character in Tolstoy's famous "Resurrection" and for the graphic representation of scenes in Siberia and other localities brought into the novel. The story of the "Resurrection" is familiar to nearly every one, and many will be interested in its screen presentation at the Strand this week.

With Miss Frederick in the cast are Robert Elliott, John Sainpolis, and Jere Austin.

The fourth installment of the noteworthy Outing-Chester pictures, entitled "Coerial on the Orinoco," is also on the Strand program, as are another chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," showing animals of the night; Smiling Billy Parsons in his latest comedy, "Matching Billy," and the topical review, which includes pictures of American troops in Europe.

On the musical program are Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, who will sing the mad scene from "Lucia," and Arthur Aldridge, singing "Carry On." The Symphony Orchestra will play the overture "Il Guarini," by Gomez.

David Graham Phillips's story about the domestic difficulties growing out of a situation in which a wife who has past her best in age and appearance becomes estranged from a husband still in his heyday, for whom feminine attractions are still strong, affords the basis of the screen version of "Old Wives for New" at the Rivoli this week. The picture was made by Cecil B. De Mille, Artcraft's director general, from a scenario prepared by himself and Jeanie Macpherson. Among those in the cast are Theodore Roberts, Elliott Dexter, Tully Marshall, Gustav Seyffertitz, Florence Vidor, Marcia Manon, Wanda Hawley, and Sylvia Ashton.

The Rivoli Orchestra will play the overture to Thomas's "Mignon"; two pupils of the Luigi Albertieri Ballet School will dance Paderewski's "Minuet" in a setting made by John Wenger; Winifred Marshall will sing the "Shadow Song" from "Dinorah," and Firmin Swinnen and Ida Waldrop will alternate at the organ during the week.

A Fox comedy called "Wild Women and Tame Lions," scenic films, and the Animated Pictorial are also on the program.

"De Luxe Annie" is derived from the play of the same name by Edward Clark, in which Jane Grey appeared on the Broadway stage last season. Its story is that of a woman crook who, with the aid of a male accomplice, is successful in living at society's expense and yet keeping more or less within the law. It is revealed that the woman is not a criminal of her own free will, and an attempt is made to surround her activities with a certain mystery which it is the business of the play to solve.

In the cast with Norma Talmadge are Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, Edwards Davis, and Edna Hunter.

The musical program of the Rialto includes the orchestra playing Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" and the intermezzo from Mascagni's "L'Amico Fritz," Greek Evans singing "A Son of the Desert Am I," by Walter A. Phillips and Arthur Depew, and George Crook at the organ.

The Rialto Animated Magazine, a scenic film, and a Mack Sennet-Paramount comedy, entitled "The Battle Royal," will be shown.

The new film at the Broadway this week, "A Soul For Sale," with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role, is about a young girl who, as the title implies, or rather shouts, sells herself to the highest bidder. The screen play is taken from a story called "Barter," by Evelyn Campbell, which appeared in Snappy Stories. The scenario was written by Elliott J. Clawson.

The cast includes Albert Rosco, William Buress, Harry Dunkenson, Katherine Kirkwood and Joseph Gerard. The picture was directed by Allan Holubar, who was in charge of the production of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

In addition to the featured film at the Broadway, the program will be the Universal Screen Magazine, the Broadway Topical Digest, songs by Helen Rumsey Smith, and music by the women's orchestra under the direction of Caroline B. Nicols.

Dr. Leonard S. Sugden, whose exhibition of Alaskan pictures at the Rialto last year attracted favorable attention, brings what is said to be a new series of views of Alaska to the Belmont Theatre this week, beginning on Tuesday evening. The pictures were made by the Prisma natural color process, which should go far toward putting the beauty and wonder of Alaska on the screen. Also, there are many scenes of excitement, especially that showing Dr. Sugden running the White Horse Rapids on the Yukon River, and the Klondyke Days are represented by a number of specially prepared views. Dr. Sugden, who has been a surgeon of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, a Government pilot on the Yukon River, an explorer, and a big-game hunter, has traveled extensively in Alaska, and has demonstrated high ability in photographing nature under difficult conditions.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" enters upon its eighth successful week at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre with no evidence of loss of interest by the public.

This week's bill at Loew's New York Theatre is:

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Moonshine" tomorrow and Tuesday, Alice Brady in "At the Mercy of Men" tomorrow, Alice Joyce in "The Triumph of the Weak" on Tuesday, Mary Pickford in "M'liss" on Wednesday, Peggy Hyland in "Peg of the Pirates" on Thursday, William Desmond in "Old Hartwell's Club" and Carmel Meyers in "A Broadway Scandal" on Friday, June Elvidge in "The Oldest Law" on Saturday, and Harold Lockwood in "Lend Me Your Name" next Sunday.

Moving-picture producers, actors, authors, exhibitors, and all others affiliated with the film industry are mobilized for the Red Cross drive this week and mean to contribute by and through themselves a large part of the $100,000,000 which the relief organization will raise. Officially the moving-picture interests are united in a working arrangement with the stage, the Allied Theatrical and Moving Picture team having charge of the work. William Fox is the head of this team, and his chief assistants in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and the Bronx are John Manheimer, William Brandt, and John Wittman.

The team's assigned quota is $500,000, but Mr. Fox and his associates are out to get $1,000,000 from the 1,500,000 whom they expect to reach. Between 6,000 and 7,000 workers will make an active campaign among theatres and restaurants in the city, and a number of special events will be staged, among them a performance at the Strand next Saturday morning. The big wind-up will come with a ball at the Hotel Astor on Saturday night.

The committee's headquarters are in the Subway Central Building at 1,465 Broadway, and the telephone number is Bryant 2900.

Why wait to be solicited for a subscription to the fund? Why not volunteer before being drafted?

Pictures prepared to show how soldiers passing through New York on their way overseas spend their time are being made by the Committee on Public Information in co-operation with the War Camp Community Service and will be distributed throughout the country for the information and encouragement of families and friends back home. The former Earlington Hotel, now operated for the benefit of soldiers, and the late Princeton Club, recently opened for officers under the auspices of the Union League Club and the New York War Camp Community Service, will provide the backgrounds for many of the pictures.

Bill Hart, according to report, is engaged to Miss Margaret Evans of Butte, Mon., whom he met on his recent Liberty Loan tour.

Another item concerning Hart is that the 150th California Infantry, stationed at Camp Kearny, has adopted him as its godfather and styled the members of the organization the "Bill Hart Two-Gun Men." Mr. Hart will entertain the officers of the regiment at a military ball to be given in their honor at Coronado, Cal., in the latter part of the month.

As soon as her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation expires, Pauline Frederick's pictures will be produced by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company and distributed through Goldwyn. Willard Mack, Miss Frederick's husband, has taken charge of Goldwyn's scenario department, so the two will be associated hereafter in their work. Mr. Mack is the author of a number of well-known stage plays, including "Kick In" and "Tiger Rose," and has been writing scenarios for some time.

Goldwyn, by the way, announces that it will double the number of its annual releases, turning out more than fifty photoplays in the next twelve months as against twenty-six in the last. Six productions featuring Geraldine Farrar, eight with Pauline Frederick, eight with Mabel Normand, eight with Mae Marsh, eight with Madge Kennedy, and six picturizations of Rex Beach's novels are promised.

Maurice Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," a screen adaptation of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, is now being made at Fort Lee, N. J., where Mr. Tourneur has a studio. The director's success with "The Whip," another Drury Lane melodrama, and, more recently, with "The Blue Bird," puts a promise into the announcement that arouses expectations.

Some announcements of forthcoming pictures are:

By Paramount—"Uncle Tom's Cabin," with Marguerite Clark as Little Eva and Topsy; "In the Claws of the Hun," "His Own Home Town," and "A Nine o'Clock Town," with Charles Ray; "The Mating of Marcella" and "Tyrant Fear," with Dorothy Dalton; "The White Man's Law" and "The Bravest Way," with Sessue Hayakawa; "Less Than Kin" and "The Firefly of France," with Wallace Reid; "Missing," based upon Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel of the same name, and produced by J. Stuart Blackton; "Love's Conquest," an adaptation of Sardou's "Gismonda," with Lina Cavalieri; "Viviette," based upon William J. Locke's novel, with Vivian Martin; "Her Final Reckoning," founded on Jules Claretie's novel, "Prince Zilah," with Pauline Frederick; "A Desert Wooing," with Enid Bennett.

By Artcraft—"He Comes Up Smiling" and "Say, Young Fellow!" with Douglas Fairbanks; "The Danger Mark," "A Doll's House," and "Heart of the Wilds," with Elsie Ferguson; "Captain Kidd, Jr.," with Mary Pickford; "We Can't Have Everything," with Wanda Hawley.

By Goldwyn—"The Venus Model," with Mabel Normand; "All Woman" and "The Glorious Adventure," with Mae Marsh; "The Service Star" and "The Fair Pretender," with Madge Kennedy; "Social Ambition," with Howard Hickman.

By Vitagraph—"Find the Woman" and "To the Highest Bidder," with Alice Joyce; "The Girl in His House" and "The Man From Brodneys," with Earle Williams; "Baree, Son of Kazan" and "A Gentleman's Agreement," with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman; "The Soap Girl" and "The Rebel," with Gladys Leslie; "Tangled Lives" and "Fiddler's Green," with Harry Morey and Betty Blythe; "A Fight for Millions," with William Duncan.

By World Pictures—"Mandarin's Gold," with Kitty Gordon; "By Hook or Crook," with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley; "The Blood of the Trevors," with Barbara Castleton; "The Power and the Glory," with Madge Evans, Albert Hart, Charley Jackson, and Sheridan Handy; "The Man Hunt," with Ethel Clayton.

By the Sherman Productions Company—"The Light of the Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum and Winifred Kingston; "The Wolf Breed," with Dustin Farnum.

By the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation—"A Romance of the Under World" and "Marriage." By the Marion Davies Film Company—"Cecilia of the Pink Roses." By the Graphic Film Corporation—"When Men Betray," with Stuart Holmes. By De Luxe Pictures—"The Street of Seven Stars," with Doris Kenyon. By American-Mutual—"A Square Deal" and "Impossible Susan," with Margarita Fisher. By Yorke—"Lend Me Your Name," with Harold Lockwood. By Pathé—"The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward.

Benjamin Chapin, who put the life of Lincoln on the screen in a serial entitled "The Son of Democracy," has been awarded the degree of Doctor of Literature by the Lincoln Memorial University of Cumberland, W. Va., in recognition of his production.

The historic slave block which, until the recent demolition of the building, stood in the basement of the old Hotel St. Louis in New Orleans, an object of interest to thousands of visitors, and from which, in ante-bellum days, negro slaves were regularly sold at auction, will provide part of the scenery for Paramount's production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Mabel Normand will appear soon in a photoplay produced to promote the sale of thrift stamps.

The Educational Films Corporation's naval picture, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," will be shown privately in the clubrooms of the Architectural League of America in West Fifty-seventh Street on Thursday evening of next week. The film will be exhibited in June for a week or more at some Broadway theatre and then put out for general release.

The Madlaine Traverse Film Corporation, it is announced, is in the process of formation. Miss Traverse expects to produce feature films only.

GROW MORE AND BETTER CROPS. GET A BEEMAN POWER CULTIVATOR

Make Two Grow Where Only One Grew Before

Close cultivation means more and better crops. Let the little Beeman Cultivator make two potatoes, two ears of corn or two onions grow where only one will grow without its aid. It cultivates faster and better than you can do it any other way. It goes astride narrow-rowed crops and between the rows on wide-rowed crops. Saves money, time and labor; does the work of ten men. It also plows, harrows, and hauls loads. Does other work that can be done by a horse. You can sell your horse if you buy the Beeman.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS OF A LINGERING SEASON

THE ONE-ACT PLAY

By JOHN CORBIN.

IF, as has been rather widely reported, the present season of the Washington Square Players is to be their last, then the dramatic life of this so-called metropolis will have lost one of its few distinctive features, and—to lovers of the "written" play, the play of atmosphere, mood, and character—its most interesting.

The panegyrics of unwise partisans have made it difficult at times to render a faithful account of the work of this company without seeming to praise with faint damns. Much of the acting has been technically crude and emotionally uninspired. A few of the productions have been horrid botches. Personally I shall never quite forgive the Players for missing the divine humor and the humble spirituality in Masterlinck's "Miracle of Saint Anthony," nor for making the catastrophe in "The Clod" spring from the melodramatic insolence of the soldiers rather than from the seeming trifle of a broken teacup. But these are mere incidents in three years of unflagging devotion to all that is rarest in the drama and of almost unfailing sympathy with a range of subjects extending from relentless tragedy to irresponsible farce and rollicking burlesque.

The best index of the achievements of the Players is perhaps to be found in the new artistic personalities to which they have introduced us. Is there any dramatist of the Great White Way who equals Susan Glaspell in subtle feminine intuition, in keen social satire? In her little unconventional tragedy of "Trifles" she disclosed a whole region of poignant feminine suffering. In "Suppressed Desires" she threw a flood of genial ridicule upon the Greenwich Villager's pose of "freedom." Her talent is for genre painting at its most intimate—a talent which, except for the Players, would never have been known to our theatre. Lawrence Langener has developed a similar vein of satire, but with a broader masculine touch. "Another Way Out" is a social burlesque which, in its firm intelligence and vigorous strokes of caricature, commands comparison with the French theatre, while remaining true to local moods and conditions. Philip Moeller unites with the gift of satire the touch of humoresque fantasy. Like Shaw, he embodies his most personal and whimsical comments in the personalities of historic, or pseudo-historic, figures. "Helena's Husband" will long be remembered as a little masterpiece of travesty. But it is in the sea scenes of Eugene O'Neill, I am inclined to think, that the work of the management has produced its highest results. Mr. O'Neill has an almost feminine fineness in the divination of character: yet at his best he has a masculine vigor and raciness as intense as that of Kipling, while unmistakably his own. "Bound East for Cardiff" and "In the Zone" are as distinct and as richly harmonious in their lights and shadows as a Rembrandt. "Ile" seems to have found less favor with the public, but Mr. O'Neill has done nothing finer and robuster than the portrait of the master whaler who wrecked his wife's reason and his own happiness at the bidding of professional pride. Except for one or two pieces by Eugene Walter, the "regular" stage of Broadway might be searched in vain for a creative touch as distinct and authentic.

The quality of all these playwrights seems predestined for the one-act play, and for a special, limited public. Both Mr. Langener and Mr. Moeller have attempted the three-act form, the latter with the aid of Mrs. Fiske's rare art. Neither succeeded, or really deserved to succeed. Mr. Langener's play was built upon an excellent one-act idea which he twice repeated with the inevitable effect of an iteration truly damnable. Mr. Moeller discovered, let us hope, that it is not possible to sustain interest in character burlesque merely by multiplying the subjects. Viewed in a single episode, his George Sand might have taken a place beside his Helena; but when to the Dudevant-De Musset imbroglio he added the De Musset-Pagello and the Pagello-Chopin escapades, he produced an effect not unlike that of Mr. Langener's iterations. The talent for the one-acter is apparently as much a thing by itself as the talent for the short story. If it is to be denied its field in our theatre, the loss will be of much the same order as if there had been no magazines to carry broadcast the stories of Mary Wilkins and Kipling.

Social Dramatist or Sociologist?

A RECENT attempt in these columns to define the nature of Ibsen's interest in social questions has resulted in much eloquent objection, the grounds for which are not, however, very clear. It seems necessary to insist again upon the difference between social drama and sociology—between a representation of social problems in concrete character and a constructive criticism of social institutions in the abstract.

Mr. Perlman's letter, printed elsewhere on this page, makes much of Ibsen's interest in personal conduct, and of his consequent power as a social influence—all of which has from the start been freely granted, even insisted on. The dramas certainly "suggest" how, in individual instances, not only wifehood and husbandhood, but the liberties of men and women in general, may be "bettered." But as certainly neither they nor Ibsen's letters and public utterances reveal him as the champion of a "new" marriage, of woman's suffrage, or of any other scheme for bettering sociological and political institutions. He gives us stirring examples in conduct, profoundly studied object lessons, but they are totally unrelated to abstract theory.

Far from being detrimental to his fame as a dramatist, the fact is probably related to the chief source of his strength. Shaw and Brieux, even Dumas fils, are "constructive sociological thinkers"; but their "influence" upon the world has been comparatively slight. The extraordinary power of Ibsen springs largely from the fact that, being the dramatist par excellence, he realized the very limited utility, in the theatre, of discussing ideas and systems, and the overwhelming importance of absolute character developed through crucial situations.

As an intellect he might possibly have been greater if he had possessed the power of abstract constructive thought; but as a dramatist he gained immeasurably because he saw life in concrete instances unwarped and unsophisticated by sociologic or political theory. The distinction involved is as clear as its importance is primary; but to the end of time, no doubt, enthusiasts will foist their pet theories upon Ibsen, as philosophers have read their favorite mare's nests into Shakespeare. Ibsen was too great a dramatist of the social man to be a sociological quacksalver, as Shakespeare was too great a dramatist of poetic passion to care a rap for the moonings of philosophy.

Mr. Perlman's assumption that to be an anarchist one must hurl bombs is peculiarly naïve. Anarchism may exist, as it generally has existed, quite independent of "overt action." In Ibsen's case it was described as a largely unconscious tendency and, at its utmost development, as only one of his two "self-contradicting" moods. In the mood of "Peer Gynt" and of "Hedda Gabler" he was thoroughly alive to evils of social irresponsibility. To the mind, however, that cannot conceive of a social dramatist who is not also a sociologist, it is natural enough to deny that a man may be a dramatist of anarchic character who does not personally bomb the policeman.

IBSEN AS THEORIST.

To the Dramatic Editor:

Although you candidly admit that you do not "really like" Ibsen's plays, you point out that their influence gave birth to a new drama in Middle Europe, wrought a change in the English drama, stirred up to a degree France, "most impervious of all nations to outside forces," and even stimulated thought among us "most lethargic of peoples"—all of which is indisputable. But the accusation you level at him, namely, that he was "utterly incapable of constructive social thinking and indifferent to political 'wrongs' and 'rights,'" is, in my opinion, unsupportable.

Has Ibsen suggested how our marriage institutions may be bettered? I think he has. "A Doll's House," "Ghosts," and "Little Eyolf" give a definite answer to the question. In these plays Ibsen clearly indicates that ideal marriage must be founded on truth and equality, that there must be a common interest in married life, and that the woman who raises a family earns her bread not by virtue of her sex, but by virtue of the social service she renders as a mother—a service tantamount to, if not greater than, the one rendered by the man as breadwinner. The reason for the smash-up of "A Doll's House" is because neither Nora nor Helmer recognized these truths. Nora distinctly tells Helmer that she must learn to be herself before she can expect to resume her duties at home. In "Ghosts" Ibsen points out again that Mrs. Alving was justified in fleeing from her libertine husband. However, owing partly to her own timidity and partly to the advice of the unctuous Pastor Manders, who is afraid of self-compromise, she returns to her home. The tragic consequences speak louder than all the tomes that have been written on marriage before and after Ibsen. In "Little Eyolf" the tragedy is the outcome of the lack of sympathy between husband and wife. It is only after the drowning of Eyolf that Rita and Allmers are drawn together and resolve to find a common interest in life. It seems to me that in this play the author's views on marriage are decidedly constructive.

Although the apostle of individualism, Ibsen knew that this doctrine had its limitations. If he was, as you say, "in effect an anarchist," then a very tame anarchist he must have been, indeed, for he believed that the pen is mightier than the bomb. Of Stockmann, he says himself that "the doctor is a more muddle-headed man than I." Brand, the noncompromising hero, who sounds the call of the clarion "all or nothing," is in quest of the unattainable, and dies forsaken by kith and kin. Ibsen wields a two-edged sword. If he smites the "compact majority" and the mob rule, he equally smites the visionary and impractical theorist.

If Ibsen had not been a constructive thinker, his influence would have been negligible. Since Nora had left her fireside, thousands upon thousands of women followed her. As a result fear crept into the hearts of the men, and they awoke to the realization that there must be something radically wrong with our established laws of domestic relations. They were forced to lend an ear to woman's complaint, and as a consequence, she has come into her own sphere. In politics, too, Ibsen would not be muzzled. He said that the State has been organized for man, not man for the State. He raised his voice in protest against demagogues, quack politicians, sycophants, and adventurers. He insisted that all forms of relationship in private life and in public must be founded on truth and freedom. Does such a philosophy savor of anarchy? I think not. He held himself to the same strict accountability as he demanded in others.

"In spite of his eternal revolt against and denial of the ancient gods," a Russian critic writes of Ibsen, "he is one of the primary and most ardent promoters of the great intellectual reaction from theories of a destructive nature to a constructive philosophical and artistic work, which we are experiencing at the present day." A viewpoint diametrically opposed to yours. Such divergence of opinion is only possible when one approaches the work of the genius. One can read any philosophy into Ibsen's plays; it lends itself to all forms of interpretation. "Art," says Romaine Rolland in Jean Christophe, "is a comet sweeping through the infinite. * * * It may be that its force is useful or apparently useless and dangerous in the existing order of the work-a-day world. * * * But it is a force * * * the lightning from heaven. * * * It is like the sun whence it has sprung. The sun is neither moral nor unmoral. * * * It lights the darkness of space." And so does Ibsen's art. He has opened vistas before us heretofore invisible to the mental eye. He directed our gaze inwardly and bade us to regenerate ourselves before we can grapple successfully with the social and political problems that confront us. His creed was in the words of Shakespeare:

"* * * To thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not be false to any man."

WM. J. PERLMAN.

THE WEEK'S NEW OFFERINGS

TWO more new productions this week will keep the theatrical season from lapsing into a condition of innocuous desuetude. One of these, which marks the start of a new and unique theatrical venture, will be of particular interest; the other is a Summer musical show.

ROCK-A-BYE BABY — Wednesday night at the Astor Theatre.

Few successful farces have had the longevity of Margaret Mayo's "Baby Mine." It is something more than six or seven years since the piece scored its great success here, in the interim it has been acted in many parts of the world, and is even today playing in London. And now New York is to have it again—tricked out with songs and girls, this time, and offered as a Summer musical comedy.

The melodies of "Rock-a-Bye Baby" are from the inexhaustible bag of Jerome Kern, and Miss Mayo's farce has been worked over into a libretto by the hand of Edgar Allan Woolf. The lyrics are by Herbert Reynolds, and the cast includes Louise Dresser, who flits from the legitimate stage to vaudeville and from vaudeville to musical comedy; Walter Jones, who will be seen in the part which he played in "Baby Mine"; Dorothy Dickson and Carl Hyson, the dancing pair; Edna Hibbard, who will have the Marguerite Clark rôle; Frank Morgan, Edna Munsey, Alan Hale, Arthur Lipson, Eddy Myers, John Ardizoni, Gus Baci, and others.

STARTING SOMETHING—Wednesday night at the Vieux Colombier.

This piece, a play by Mrs. Elizabeth Tyree Metcalfe, will be played at the French Theatre the last half of the week in aid of the Red Cross. Mrs. Metcalf and Ethel Hornick, members of the old Lyceum Theatre company, will return to the stage for the occasion, and the cast will also include Lucia Moore, Mrs. Jacques Martin, and Donald Ross.

HER HONOR THE MAYOR—Thursday night at the Fulton Theatre.

A new enterprise and a new playwright will get their respective starts at the Fulton Theatre Thursday night. The Actors' and Authors' has been organized, as the title indicates, by actors and the authors; its aim is to give the player employment at a modest wage, and a share of the profits, between more lucrative engagements, and also to encourage the native dramatist by producing his plays. It has been launched by a number of figures well known in acting and writing circles, and its hope is to make the Fulton Theatre the permanent home of its productions.

Their first piece is a suffrage comedy, called "Her Honor the Mayor," and its author, as might be supposed, is a woman—Arline Van Ness Hines. Preceding this play will be a one-act piece called "The Good Men Do," the central character of which is William Shakespeare. The author is Hubert Osborne, who also wrote "April" of recent memory.

Among the players who will appear on the first program will be Hilda Spong, Laura Nelson Hall, Mrs. Thomas A. Wise, Harold Hartsell, and Auriol Lee.

"Cheer Up," which has not been current at the Hippodrome for a week, will be restaged at that playhouse in its entirety on Thursday night for the benefit of the Red Cross. Sprinkled throughout the entertainment, also, will be a number of other performers more or less known to fame—the list including Fred Stone, Raymond Hitchcock, De Wolf Hopper, Annette Kellermann, the Brown Brothers, Julia Sanderson, Joseph Cawthorn, and Doyle and Dixon. It will be observed that all of this number are Dillingham entertainers — even Miss Sanderson and Mr. Cawthorn, late of the Frohman forces.

For Soldiers and Sailors.

Elsie Ferguson will be among those who will appear at the Casino Theatre this afternoon at the regular Sunday afternoon vaudeville program for soldiers and sailors. At the Playhouse tonight, also, the customary Sunday night show will be given. Both shows are free to men in uniform.

The Drama Comedy will give a Red Cross matinee at the Casino Theatre on Tuesday, those who will appear including Grant Mitchell, Amelia Johnson and a group of Midnight Frolickers, Willa Holt Wakefield, Princess Wite Deer Foot, Mary Ryan, Whiting and Burt, Arthur Albro, Marguerite Sylva, Dore and Cavanaugh, Clifton Crawford, and a number of others.

An entertainment tonight at the studios at 40 West Fifty-seventh Street will have the Navy Smoke and Canteen Fund as its beneficiary, and will enlist the services of a number of well-known entertainers. Included in the number will be Dolly Sisters, Leo Carrillo, Ann Pennington, Ina Claire, Grace La Rue, Beth Lydy, Harry Fox, Clifton Crawford, Frank Craven, the Three Dooleys, Kay Laurell, Marion Davies, and Roshanara.

Oliver Morosco, who likes to dabble with the drama as author as well as producer, has put together a revue called "Gosh! We're All Friends," which will be offered at the Morosco Theatre tonight in aid of the Stage Women's War Relief. Among those whose talents will be employed in the course of the evening are Grace La Rue, Charlotte Greenwood, Walter Catlett, Sidney Grant, Frederick Burton, Charles Ruggles, Leo Carrillo, Franklyn Underwood, and even Mr. Morosco herself.

Yvette Guilbert and Percy Grainger are among those who will appear at the Shubert Theatre tonight at an entertainment to be given under the auspices of the American Committee for Devastated France.

A new comedy by Susan Glaspell, entitled "Woman's Honor," will be played for the first time at the Greenwich Village Theatre tomorrow night. It will succeed "The Big Scene" on the current program.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

AS early as mid-May this year it is possible to glance into the next theatrical season and discern with reasonable accuracy the lineup of August and early September attractions. In the slack periods, with a dozen or more playhouses standing idle, a theatre famine appears an impossibility, but the experience of the past few seasons has shown that there never are enough playhouses to go around when the producers begin unveiling their attractions at the beginning of a season. The manager who has his own New York theatre and not more than one play to submit is face to face with no problem, but with the others, who either have no theatres of their own or intend to offer more plays than they have playhouses, the case is different. Accordingly the favorite theatres are being spoken for earlier and earlier each year, and already the opening attractions at a dozen or more important houses have been definitely—or fairly definitely—decided upon.

Thus it seems probable, at this writing, that "Friendly Enemies" will have its New York season at the Hudson, a fact which is a source of no little surprise to those who follow theatrical affairs. This play, at present running at the Woods Theatre in Chicago, is a success of such proportions that the combined profits of play and theatre are reported to be in the neighborhood of $10,000 weekly, a figure almost unprecedented in the theatre. Being a Woods production, it had been generally expected that Mr. Woods would desire to install it in one of his own theatres in New York, the Eltinge or the Republic, and thus insure for himself the entire profit of the venture instead of being compelled to divide with a theatre owner. A partial explanation of the step, however, is to be found in the larger seating capacity of the Hudson.

The first star of the season at the Empire—there are always stars at the Empire—will be Cyril Maude, who will be seen in C. Haddon Chambers's comedy, "The Saving Grace," lately played with considerable success in London. Laura Hope Crews will be Mr. Maude's leading woman. The start of the new season, incidentally, will mark the beginning of Mr. Belasco's participation in the management of the Empire, and it is probable that that theatre will house a Belasco production before the season is over.

Speaking of Mr. Belasco, the Fall production at the Belasco Theatre will be Frances Starr in "Over the Hills," recently played for a try-out week in Washington. Confirmation of this booking was drawn from Mr. Belasco in the form of an answer to a Washington critic, who questioned the play's future. It had been thought for a time that the Belasco might house the newest Belasco leading woman, Jeanne Eagels, and her play, which has already gone into rehearsal in anticipation of an out-of-town whirl. It may be, however, that this piece, "Daddies," will be seen at the Lyceum.

Mr. Woods's Fall pieces, in addition to the aforementioned "Friendly Enemies," are a musical comedy called "See You Later," by Bolton, Wodehouse et al., and "My Boy," the two-characterered war drama from London. Present indications are that both of these pieces will start their New York careers in August, the former at the Eltinge and the latter at the Republic.

Henry Miller has already announced, via the program at his theatre, that the Fall attraction at his new house in Forty-third Street will be Ruth Chatterton in a new play. The program does not contain the information that the new play is by Willard Mack, but such is the case. At the Plymouth Theatre, as already announced in these columns, there will be seen in August a comedy called "A Very Good Young Man," written by Martin Brown with the assistance of Robert Housum. Mr. Hopkins will make the production.

It appears reasonably certain that the Morosco will begin its season with "Mary's Way Out," a comedy by Ashton Stevens, a Chicago dramatic critic. Another of the Hatton comedies, however, is also a candidate for the Morosco opening honors. The Astor, along about Aug. 19, will have the redoubtable Drews, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney, in "Keep Her Smiling," which, after a successful season in Boston, retired for the Summer a week ago.

The Century, as everybody knows, will begin its season with "Maid of the Mountains," a London musical comedy. The new Selwyn, in Forty-second Street, will start with the third of the Jane Cowl-Jane Murfin series of dramas, called "Information, Please!" Probably the Gaiety early in September will house the long-awaited dramatization of Tarkington's "Penrod," which will have its first performance in Atlantic City tomorrow night.

Cohan and Harris more than likely will bring "Three Faces East" into their own theatre, the Cohan and Harris. Winthrop Ames is busily making over his Little Theatre, which has been closed all seashon, and expects to reopen it in the Fall with Masterlinck's sequel to "The Blue Bird," known in French as "Les Fiancailles." Probably Mr. Brady will bring his dramatization of Joseph Conrad's "Victory" to The Playhouse, but that is as yet undecided. And certainly Fred Stone will resume at the Globe in the Fall, for his all-season run there has not begun to exhaust the number of persons who want to see him.

A season or more ago there were rumors that Thomas A. Wise was about to make his appearance as P. T. Barnum in a play having that celebrated showman as its principal character, but the months passed and nothing became of it. Now, however, the play is to be tried out by Edward H. Robins's Toronto stock company, and if all goes well Mr. Wise will be seen here in the piece in the Fall. Harrison Rhodes is the author.

The return of the firm of Wagenhals & Kemper to the producing field—they are preparing the Sergeant Empey-Rose Stahl opus—has occasioned some comment along the Rialto during the last week. Messrs. Wagenhals & Kemper constitute one of the few theatrical firms which ever frankly discontinued producing because they had made enough money. The great Wagenhals & Kemper success was "Paid in Full," and was later followed by another substantial hit in "Seven Days." After "Seven Days" Wagenhals & Kemper made but one production, "The Greyhound," and then announced their permanent retirement. This was about six or seven years ago. The rapidly increasing value of Broadway property furnished them with one of their greatest assets, for they were fortunate enough to possess a long lease on the Astor Theatre. Upon their retirement they sublet the theatre to Cohan & Harris at a figure said to be $25,000 in excess of their rental. Later Cohan & Harris re-sublet the theatre to the Shuberts, but this arrangement, of course, has not interfered with the interest of Wagenhals & Kemper in the property.

Like all other "Follies," the 1918 edition is being written during rehearsals. Possibly no entertainment in the world goes into rehearsal with less actual material in sight than does the "Follies." Invariably the cast is recruited in its entirety before work is begun on the writing of the show, and the librettist, composer, and lyric writer then take stock of the capabilities and talents of the performers and write a show to fit them. This year, as a matter of fact, the show had been in rehearsal several days when Mr. Ziegfeld suddenly decided to change authors, substituting Rennold Wolf for George V. Hobart. Despite the recentness of this substitution, the show is scheduled to open in Atlantic City on June 3, and undoubtedly will. New York, as is the annual custom, will see it a week later—at the New Amsterdam, of course. It had been planned to move "The Rainbow Girl," which is entirely too prosperous to leave New York, to the Cohan Theatre, but the success of "The Kiss Burglar" at that house now makes such a step impossible. What will probably happen is that "The Rainbow Girl" will be moved to the Liberty, and that the highly successful "Going Up" will simultaneously be transferred to the Cohan & Harris for the Summer.

There finally comes from London detailed information as to the manner in which Hall Caine has altered "The Prime Minister" for production in England. As played here by Elsie Ferguson, it will be remembered, Margaret Schiller saved the life of the Prime Minister at the final curtain by throwing herself in front of him and receiving her brother's bullet herself. Now, however, she is early persuaded of the error of her ways, and the curtain falls with her declamation of a patriotic speech, in the course of which she curses a picture of her erstwhile master, the Kaiser. And, instead of Margaret's heroic but tragic end, the audience is invited to look forward to a happy marriage between Margaret and the Prime Minister. And in England, it might be added, the piece is proving considerably more successful than it was in New York.

One of the latest actors to be called by the war is Arthur E. Hohl, who has been one of the foremost members of the Washington Square Players this season. Hohl, had he remained in civil life, would have been seen next season under the Belasco management. He played a rôle a week ago in the Frances Starr play, "Over the Hills," during the period of its preliminary performances in Washington.

A rather meagre week has brought announcement of the impending musicalization of only three comedies, although there probably are others in the offing. Those announced are "Julie Bon-Bon," originally Clara Lipman's, but to be played in musical form by Irene Bordoni; "Officer 666," one of the real successes of five or six seasons ago, and "Annabel Lee," which never reached New York in its original form. In the last-named piece Edith Taliaferro will make her musical début.

Roi Cooper Megrue's all-season silence is now beginning to bring results. His comedy, "Tea for Three," will be tried out in Washington in two weeks, and a war drama from his pencil (Mr. Megrue writes always with a pencil) will soon be produced by A. H. Woods. The name of it is "A Night at the Front," and William Courtenay will be the principal player.

Marjorie Rambeau will return to the cast of "Eyes of Youth" tomorrow night, after an absence dating from her skating accident in February. "Eyes of Youth" has been on the boards since Aug. 22, and ranks as one of the season's undeniably big successes. Had it not been for Miss Rambeau's accident, in fact, the piece would also have ranked as one of the two or three biggest financial winners.

"Fancy Free" was packed up after last night's performance at the Astor Theatre, and will be transplanted tomorrow to the Casino, which has been dark for a number of weeks in anticipation of just such a happening. The Astor was contracted for long ago by the Selwyns for their production of "Rock-a-Bye Baby," their success at that theatre with "Why Marry?" having naturally prejudiced them in the house's favor.

The midnight entertainment on the roof of the Century will be strengthened on Wednesday night by the addition of the Dolly Sisters and Johnny Dooley. The former have been spending a few weeks in Philadelphia with Mr. Weber and Mr. Fields, and are now released for the Summer. As for Mr. Dooley, he will merely join the rest of the Dooley family on the roof.

Walker Whiteside, who dropped from the theatrical limelight recently after indulging in a pair of dramatic failures, has been found in motion pictures. It is probable that he will continue there for at least two years.

Impending vaudeville acquisitions are Taylor Holmes, who has been filming it of late, and George MacFarlane, who recently stepped from "Miss Springtime" to the all-star cast of "Out There."

A theatre ticket agency has presented every box office man in New York with an order for a straw hat, which suggests that the reason the average man is unsuccessful in obtaining tickets at the box office is because he doesn't go at it the right way.

WHO IS DORIS RANKIN?

AUDIENCES at "The Copperhead"—exclusive only of a few close followers of things theatrical who take pride in their knowledge of such matters—are for the most part unaware of the fact that Doris Rankin is Mrs. Lionel Barrymore. Miss Rankin, if the identification tag is necessary, plays the wife of Milt Shanks in the first two acts and his granddaughter in the third and fourth. Not only is she Mrs. Barrymore, as a matter of fact, but she is a descendant of a theatrical family almost as famous as that of her husband. Her father was McKee Rankin.

Miss Rankin played several rôles in her father's company, her best remembered part being that of the Italian white slave in "The White Slaver." Before this she had appeared in a number of sketches with her father and Lionel Barrymore. Barrymore's retirement from theatrical work in 1906 meant her retirement as well, and for many years the couple lived in Paris, where Barrymore studied music and painting.

HISTORY

The most remarkable tribute ever paid to anyone identified with the world of the screen drama is the honor which has just been bestowed upon David Wark Griffith by the Board of Historians at present engaged in compiling the Standard Contemporary History of the Great War.

At a meeting of these historians, comprising representatives, professors and members of the faculty of the leading universities of America, a general discussion took place concerning Mr. Griffith's supreme triumph, "Hearts of the World," and those present agreed that in this gigantic contribution to the world's record of the war, Mr. Griffith has proven himself the greatest of war historians.

My Dear Mr. Griffith:

At an editorial conference of our Board of Historians today, we discussed the value of your Motion Picture Masterpiece, "Hearts of the World," as a permanent contribution to the world's history.

It may interest you to know that we agreed your production is the most notable on record that the War has produced. We feel privileged in greeting you as the greatest of war historians.

Again extending to you my highest admiration for your epoch-making achievements, I am cordially yours,

(Signed) FRANCIS TREVELYAN MILLER (Litt. D., LL.D.)

STARS IN WAR BENEFITS

BENEFITS for allied nations and for the Red Cross drive will furnish an unusual calendar of musical events in New York during the coming week. Further afield, the Bethlehem Bach Festival is among current announcements, while in town the Metropolitan Opera House will aid the Red Cross not only of this Country but also of Italy, home of many of the singing stars.

Cantor Josef Rosenblatt will appear at Carnegie Hall this afternoon, accompanied by Andre Benoist, in tenor airs from Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine," Bizet's "Pearl Fishers," Halévy's "La Juive," and Verdi's "Rigoletto." He will also sing Massenet's "Elegie," Gretschaninow's "Lullaby," two Hebrew airs arranged by himself; "Um pne Chatoenu," and "Omar Rabbi Eliezer;" a Jewish folksong, "Auf dem Pripichuk," and Schalitt's "Elil, Elil."

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, among the stars in a benefit for the Russian Relief Fund this evening at Carnegie Hall will play a caprice-burlesque of his own, a prelude of Rachmaninow, and the Glinka-Balakirev, "L'Alouette." Adam Didur and Eva Didur will sing Russian and Polish songs and duets, and Sascha Jacobsen will play violin solos by Wieniawski, Rachmaninow and Cesar Cui.

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, with Morgan Kingston, the Welsh tenor of the Metropolitan, and Nina Morgana, soprano, will appear tonight at the Hippodrome in the last of the season's popular-price concerts under the auspices of the Brownsville Labor Lyceum.

Yvette Guilbert, Percy Grainger, and the 15th Coast Artillery Band, led by Renzo Resta, will take part in a patriotic program at the Schubert Theatre tonight for the American Committee for Devastated France. Besides the music, there will be an address by Martin W. Littleton.

Marcia Van Dresser, Clarence Whitehill, and the Trio de Lutece open a week of concerts for the Red Cross drive tomorrow at the house of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, 677 Fifth Avenue. Others to appear are Frances Alda, Mabel Garrison, Carolina Lazzari, and Herbert Witherspoon.

Josef Hofmann will play Beethoven's sonata "Apassionata" and pieces by Chopin, Sgambati, Saint-Saëns, Tschaikowsky, and Liszt at his Red Cross matinée on Tuesday in Carnegie Hall. During intermission there will be a brief address by Theodore Roosevelt.

Eva Didur, Clara de Kwapiszewska, Norma Robins, Obrad Gjurin, and Nikola Zanlovich will sing and Edouard de Kuryio and Mme. Kuryio will dance at a benefit Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall for the Polish Hospital in France and the Serbian Field Hospital.

Caruso, Alda, Braslau, Anna Case, and Muzio, Martinelli, Amato, De Luca, and Scotti, with the opera orchestra and chorus under Papi, Moranzoni, and Setti, are announced in a gala Metropolitan concert next Friday, Italy-America Day, for the Italian Red Cross.

John McCormack has obtained special leave for Lieutenant Donald McBeath, now of the Canadian aviation forces, to appear as his assisting violinist in the tenor's benefit concert for the Catholic Orphan Aylum next Sunday at the Hippodrome.

BACH FESTIVAL NEAR.

Musicians from many parts of the country will be the guests of Charles M. Schwab at the annual Bach Festival, to be held at Lehigh University, Bethlehem, Penn., next Friday and Saturday, May 24 and 25. Dr. J. Fred Wolle will lead the 250 singers of Pennsylvania's famous chorus, with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Moravian Trombone Choir. The soloists will be Mildred Faas, Mae Hotz, Emma Roberts, Merle Alcock, Nicholas Douty, and Charles T. Tittmann. For the opening session, next Friday afternoon, the works chosen are three cantatas—"My Spirit Was in Heaviness," "God's Time Is the Best," and "Now Shall the Grace." That evening adds an "Ode of Mourning" and the "Magnificat." The two Saturday sessions will be devoted to Bach's Mass in B minor, at 2 o'clock; the "Kyrie" and "Gloria," and at 5 o'clock from the "Credo" to the end.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

Samuel A. Baldwin at the City College free organ recital today will play Bach's G minor fugue, Bossi's "Pastoral Scene," Bonnet's concert variations, Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" march, Gretchaninow's "Cradle Song," Rachmaninoff's "Serenade," Ward's sonata No. 1, and "A Deserted Farm" and "To a Water Lily" by MacDowell.

BROOKLYN MUSIC.

Arnold Volpe will conduct the Brooklyn Institute Orchestra's eighth annual concert this afternoon at the Academy of Music.

The Red Triangle Symphony Orchestra will give its final concert of the season on Wednesday evening at the Central Y. M. C. A.

The 15th Coast Artillery Band will play at the Academy on May 27 for the Brooklyn Music Settlement and the Army Relief Society.

VARIOUS MUSICAL EVENTS.

Clara Clemens and Ossip Gabrilowitsch are announced tonight at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, and on May 27 with the Humanitarian Cult at Carnegie Hall.

The Cadet Choir from the Military Academy at West Point will sing next Sunday afternoon in St. Paul's Chapel at Columbia.

Mme. Schumann-Heink and Lieutenant Sousa will take part in Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with a chorus of 10,000 on Sunday, June 2, at the Polo Grounds.

The New York Military Band, led by Edwin Franko Goldman, will start a new season of Summer concerts on June 10 at Columbia University.

The Italian Musical League of 500 members has been organized by Professor Salmaggi to promote the cause of Italian music in America.

OPERA IN THE BRONX.

The Aborn Opera Company makes its annual visit to the Bronx Opera House, beginning tomorrow night, with a repertory of ten operas, in English and Italian. In the first week's bills are: Monday, "Aida"; Tuesday, "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci"; Wednesday, "Aida" and "Lucia"; Thursday, "Gioconda"; Friday, "Rigoletto"; Saturday, "Lucia" and "Trovatore." A second week adds a Memorial Day matinée of "The Barber"; Friday, "Traviata," and Saturday matinée, "Faust."

NEWARK GUILD'S BENEFIT.

Nora Kronold and Earl Tuckerman will sing, and Hans Kronold and William Parsons will play, at a benefit concert for the Deaconess Guild of Newark Presbytery next Thursday evening at Wallace Hall in the Y. M. C. A. Building, Halsey and Cedar Streets, Newark.

PLANS OF THE MUSICIANS.

George Barrere, flute, and Ilya Schkolnik, violin, are retiring from the New York Symphony Society with the present season.

St. Mark's M. E. Choir will sing American negro spirituals on Monday evening, May 20, in Carnegie Hall.

The Music Settlement for Colored People will give a concert May 27 at Aeolian Hall under the direction of J. Rosamond Johnson.

Fritz Kreisler has contributed to the Bohemians' Club Foundation $1,911, earned in his concerts with members of the Kneisel Quartet.

The Allied Music Trades raised $3,017,250 for the Third Liberty Loan, a gain of 276 per cent. over its quota, as reported to Secretary McAdoo.

Eighty-five students and one member of the Faculty of the Institute of Musical Art are serving with the army in this country and in France.

The National Music Show, to be held at the Grand Central Palace from June 1 to 8, will include special discussions on music in the war.

HARMFUL OPPOSITION TO ANIMAL RESEARCH

Buffalo Doctors Assail Ignorant Anti-Vivisectionists for Pressure They Brought to Bear Upon the Red Cross

At a recent meeting called to consider the action of the American Red Cross in revoking its decision to appropriate money for animal research work, the Buffalo Academy of Medicine instructed a committee to prepare a protest against this action. The protest has been drawn up and sent to the Journal of the American Medical Association. It is being made public for the purpose of extending popular knowledge regarding the scientific work already accomplished and in process of investigation by animal experimentation rather than in the hope of changing the policy of the Red Cross authorities.

The Buffalo Academy of Medicine, to quote one of the members of the committee, appreciated "the splendid work which the Red Cross is doing," and had "some hesitation in making the slightest criticism at this time of an organization which has become an allied force with our army, for fear that it might be misunderstood and impede the coming drive, in the success of which we are all so deeply interested." But the fellows of the academy, after full discussion, were in agreement that the protest should be made at once.

The protest follows, in part:

"It is with regret, deeply tinged with indignation, that the Fellows of the Buffalo Academy of Medicine learn of the recent decision of the American Red Cross to withdraw appropriations of money for animal experimentation in its medical and surgical work at home and abroad.

"To animal research work the world owes almost innumerable important discoveries. What would be our unfortunate and helpless position today without diphtheria anti-toxin, anti-meningitis serum, anti-tetanic serum, vaccination against typhoid, without the Wassermann test and salvarsan? The value of these has long since passed the experimental stage. Not a single dose of these remedies can be standarized without tests upon animals.

"In the domain of surgery who can estimate what animal research work has added to the successful results of the surgeon in aseptic and antiseptic surgery, bone grafting, the surgery of arteries, nerves, joints, intestines, and, in fact, all branches of operative repair? Even the diseases of animals have been equally lessened by knowledge gained through experimental research. Is it generally appreciated that every sterile dressing, the simple first application of iodine, even the cleansing of the hands and much of the simplest work of the surgeon and nurse, owe their origin to biological research?

"We have not yet by logical reasoning reached the conclusion that the life or temporary illness of a guinea pig, mouse, or any animal can be considered when the life of man is at stake. Has the welfare of the lower animal attained special importance just now when millions of men are offering the supreme sacrifice in a foreign land?

"Animal experimentation and biological research have never been so vitally necessary as in the present war. The demand today is imperative to save every life possible which is endangered by the horrible methods of a barbarous foe. In every properly conducted modern laboratory animal suffering is minimized to the last degree, not only from humane motives, but to obtain more accurate scientific results. The benefits are immeasurable, while pain is absent or infinitesimal.

"It is impossible to estimate how seriously interference with animal experimentation will affect the safety of our soldiers and sailors. It will make impossible the conquest of several terrible diseases likely to become prevalent in our army, and which may later spread to our civil population. Scientific investigation is now particularly directed toward lessening the ravages from pneumonia, gas-gangrene, and trench fever.

"As American citizens we are opposed to making this vital work dependent upon the beneficence of any individual, or to the Red Cross delegating or dismissing the matter by leaving it to the generosity of any person or group. The money is given the Red Cross to prevent and relieve suffering and save lives. It is a distinctly national duty in every way, due to those who offer their lives for their country, and should be met squarely and not dodged or evaded. We regret that the American Red Cross officials yielded to the threats of the anti-vivisectionists and like propagandists.

"We ask assurance that provision be made for adequate experimental laboratory work. It is distinctly the function and duty of the Government to supply this need through a national agency such as the Red Cross or the War Department.

"The American Red Cross, by its decision made in weak compliance with the threat of an intolerant minority of its provisional supporters, has established a precedent which may prove calamitous and far-reaching in sinister consequences. Other irrational demands will follow and additional attempts to render scientific advance impotent will be aimed at our army, navy, and public health services. Already seditious advice has been published plainly designed to discourage enlistment and to obstruct the draft by false and malicious statements concerning vaccination for the prevention of various diseases in the army. This advice is fully as vicious as any promulgated by the German propagandists. The Red Cross by its action has taken a long step backward and failed to render deserved recognition of medical science.

"We recognize and appreciate fully the splendid and tremendously efficient work of the American Red Cross. We realize that the sacred obligation to loyally support the Red Cross rests upon each and every citizen of the United States. We pledge our continued devoted support to the Red Cross. We will not attempt to coerce the American Red Cross by the threat of discontinuance of personal and financial aid, as did the opponents of this measure, which action we regard as most unpatriotic."

The committee appointed to draw up the protest consisted of Drs. Irving M. Snow, John H. Pryor, Henry C. Buswell, F. Park Lewis, James W. Putnam, Earl P. Lothrop, DeWitt H. Sherman, and James B. Cross.

"The protest of the Buffalo Academy of Medicine against the discontinuance of animal research by the Red Cross at the war front was made on the unanimous vote at a large meeting of the fellows after the fullest discussion," said Dr. Lewis last week. "A committee was directed to voice the disapproval on the part of the local medical profession of what was deemed to be an unwise submission to the demands of a group of people who are obviously quite unconscious of the serious consequences which their ill-advised action may entail. The letter of protest was written only after a number of meetings of the committee.

"It should be clearly understood that the expression was prompted by no splenetic irritation, because the views of the ablest men and other scientists were disregarded, although it might be reasonably supposed that their judgment would carry weight. But a vital principle was at stake, and the action of so representative and responsible a body as the Red Cross would inevitably be used as a precedent in continued opposition to further important medical research.

"In this work the lower and less highly organized animals are chiefly used. But it is a well known fact that a widely read magazine rarely allows an issue to appear in which the physician is not pictured as regarding with ghoulish glee the torture of a poor dog stretched upon a rack of suffering. Other magazines circulating among the followers of special cults are regaled with the horror of the inoculations to which our soldiers are subjected. It is impossible to believe that such misrepresentations are willful. There can exist no class of people who would knowingly pervert the facts, when to do so would entail such frightful consequences upon those nearest and dearest to them. Their distorted statements and the wrong inferences to which they give rise can be due only to ignorance of the actual nature and value to our studies in immunity in lowering the mortality everywhere, and especially where large bodies of people are congregated. The facts are easily accessible and are incontrovertible. We need only compare the tragedy of typhoid at Camp Alger in the Spanish-American War and our freedom from this pestilence in our present enormous army. We need not refer to figures to recall the hopeless dread with which diphtheria was regarded before the days of antitoxin and our comparative security since we have a sure weapon against it.

"The persistence with which the misdirected efforts of those who will not familiarise themselves with the truth concerning the value of immunity have been circulated have made imperative that an educative campaign be at once inaugurated."

The Red Cross by its action has taken a long step backward and failed to render deserved recognition of medical science.

"We recognize and appreciate fully the splendid and tremendously efficient work of the American Red Cross. We realize that the sacred obligation to loyally support the Red Cross rests upon each and every citizen of the United States. We pledge our continued devoted support to the Red Cross. We will not attempt to coerce the American Red Cross by the threat of discontinuance of personal and financial aid, as did the opponents of this measure, which action we regard as most unpatriotic."

The committee appointed to draw up the protest consisted of Drs. Irving M. Snow, John H. Pryor, Henry C. Buswell, F. Park Lewis, James W. Putnam, Earl P. Lothrop, DeWitt H. Sherman, and James B. Cross.

"The protest of the Buffalo Academy of Medicine against the discontinuance of animal research by the Red Cross at the war front was made on the unanimous vote at a large meeting of the fellows after the fullest discussion," said Dr. Lewis last week. "A committee was directed to voice the disapproval on the part of the local medical profession of what was deemed to be an unwise submission to the demands of a group of people who are obviously quite unconscious of the serious consequences which their ill-advised action may entail. The letter of protest was written only after a number of meetings of the committee.

"It should be clearly understood that the expression was prompted by no splenetic irritation, because the views of the ablest men and other scientists were disregarded, although it might be reasonably supposed that their judgment would carry weight. But a vital principle was at stake, and the action of so representative and responsible a body as the Red Cross would inevitably be used as a precedent in continued opposition to further important medical research.

"In this work the lower and less highly organized animals are chiefly used. But it is a well known fact that a widely read magazine rarely allows an issue to appear in which the physician is not pictured as regarding with ghoulish glee the torture of a poor dog stretched upon a rack of suffering. Other magazines circulating among the followers of special cults are regaled with the horror of the inoculations to which our soldiers are subjected. It is impossible to believe that such misrepresentations are willful. There can exist no class of people who would knowingly pervert the facts, when to do so would entail such frightful consequences upon those nearest and dearest to them. Their distorted statements and the wrong inferences to which they give rise can be due only to ignorance of the actual nature and value to our studies in immunity in lowering the mortality everywhere, and especially where large bodies of people are congregated. The facts are easily accessible and are incontrovertible. We need only compare the tragedy of typhoid at Camp Alger in the Spanish-American War and our freedom from this pestilence in our present enormous army. We need not refer to figures to recall the hopeless dread with which diphtheria was regarded before the days of antitoxin and our comparative security since we have a sure weapon against it.

"The persistence with which the misdirected efforts of those who will not familiarize themselves with the truth concerning the value of immunity have been circulated have made imperative that an educative campaign be at once inaugurated."

The History of the War Is Being Written By the Men Who Are Directing It.

The only publication that prints in full their essential documents, reports and speeches is CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE.

NO ONE can really understand the war, no one can form a worthwhile judgment of its vast issues, without reading the vital reports and documents that the daily press can only summarize.

Current History does not present opinions, comments, rumors. It contains the facts—the full, authoritative facts—recorded by Presidents, Ministers, Generals—the men who have every source of information at their command.

That is why all those who seek to really know the facts about this portentous epoch consider Current History invaluable.

For this unique magazine, through the world-wide facilities of The New York Times Company, gathers the important data and documents on every phase of the war, and presents them in coordinated form for easy reading, quick reference and permanent preservation.

The struggle of millions; the fate of nations; the outpouring of tragedy, of heroism, of sacrifice, in volume never before known, is mirrored in the 220 fascinating pages of Current History Magazine.

SUBSCRIBE FOR IT NOW! In this decisive period you need the facts, the full, authentic facts, without suppression, evasion or distortion. These facts Current History supplies. And in the years to come it will be a unique and treasured record of the Great War, written and published as the fight for freedom was being fought.

Partial list of Contents of the May issue, now on sale at all news stands:

FORMAL ALLIANCES NOT NEEDED BY U. S.

Bonds That Unite Us With Our Allies Better Than Any Written Treaties, Says Frederic R. Coudert.

THE United States has no alliance with its "allies." Our soldiers are fighting under a French Commander in Chief, Great Britain and France have special war missions resident here, the flags of the Entente nations fly beside the Stars and Stripes, and our men in uniform stand at attention when the "Marseillaise" is played; but we are not "allied" with France and Great Britain, nor Italy, nor Belgium. Not once has the President referred to these nations as our "allies." In the history of the United States there has been only one foreign alliance. Since we became an established nation there has been none.

This curious state of affairs has aroused a good deal of discussion among the people who have stopped to realise that it exists. Without any treaty of alliance the United States has joined herself closely with France and Great Britain and the other nations fighting against Germany and Austria. Frederic R. Coudert, international lawyer, says that we are actually allied in spirit and in work. Bound by no treaty to Great Britain and France, we are co-operating with an effectiveness to which, in his opinion, more formal association would add nothing. Our traditional "isolation" he considers gone forever. We are indeed and in feeling effectually united to France and Great Britain, says Mr. Coudert, for the winning of the war.

"I have no hesitancy," Mr. Coudert said, speaking specifically of the United States, Great Britain, and France, "in saying that the most effective war co-operation is now taking place among these three nations. Among the Governments of all three there is full understanding of the necessity for joint action. This understanding was crowned by the splendid appointment of that great soldier and admirable gentleman, General Foch, to the post of Commander in Chief of the Allied Forces. No greater indication of such co-operation could have been given than this.

"I think it would be wiser to allow events to take their course without formal arrangements. The excellent spirit existing among the Governments is such that I believe cooperation will become greater day by day as the interests of the situation develop, and that the friendship engendered by having the three nations under one Commander in Chief on a common battlefield in a common cause furnishes a greater guaranty of mutual cooperation than could be embodied in any written instrument, which would, after all, but record the existing situation.

"The question of the advisability at the present time of entering into a formal treaty of alliance with France and Great Britain is, of course, a most important question of statesmanship, whose decision must ultimately rest with the President and the Senate of the United States. We refer to our splendid comrades in the world war in official communications as co-belligerents, and sometimes as associates, and this, I think, speaking from a somewhat technical standpoint, would be the correct designation.

"We, of course, think of them popularly as 'allies,' and in the popular acceptation of the term they are indeed such. No formal alliance, however, exists in the sense that no formal treaty has been concluded with these nations. Whether anything in the nature of a formal treaty is necessary to make an alliance may be a somewhat academical question. Certainly in the past many alliances have been concluded by very informal arrangements between statesmen, and the famous 'Entente between France and Great Britain was in itself of most informal character, although always looked upon as, in a very real sense, an alliance.

"The fact that the United States has only had one treaty of alliance—that concluded with France during the Revolutionary War—would naturally make our statesmen hesitate to enter into formal treaties. That treaty indicates by its very terms the necessity for a formal convention, because, at the time of its conclusion, in February, 1778, war had not broken out between France and Great Britain, and the treaty formally provided in its First Article"—Mr. Coudert quoted the document—" as follows:

"'If war should break out between France and Great Britain during the continuance of the present war between the United States and England, his Majesty and the said United States shall make it a common cause and aid each other mutually with their good offices, their counsels, and their forces, according to the exigencies of conjunctures, as becomes good and faithful allies.'

"Subsequent to the Revolutionary War," Mr. Coudert continued, "the policy of the United States to avoid all alliances became fixed and definite, although in numerous instances we cooperated with other nations in adjusting international difficulties.

"I incline to believe that it would be unwise at the present time to attempt the conclusion of any formal alliance with France and Great Britain. Circumstances much more powerful than the desire of Governments or the dictates of statesmen have brought these nations into the closest co-operation for mutual defense against a common enemy whose complete victory would ultimately spell the destruction of the fundamental principles upon which America, the French Republic, and the great British democracy are founded. I do not believe that relations could be more cordial or co-operation more complete if the parties were bound together by any mere paper stipulation. The admiration and affectionate gratitude felt for splendid France and the appreciation by that valiant people of our efforts to stand with them on the battle-line of civilization have renewed and increased the ancient friendship so that one may confidently say that no such relationship ever existed between two peoples. With Great Britain there is now a most cordial friendship, and our public, forgetting the causes of friction that have occurred during the last hundred years—questions happily settled by arbitration—have finally fully realized that Great Britain and the United States are both striving for the same thing in world politics—the sanctity of international law and the freedom of peoples as against the aggression of a nation mad for world power and knowing no law save its own supposed necessities. Nor would it at this time be wise to attempt to measure out in mere words the obligations of the three parties toward each other. During the war there must be that complete unity that comes from a common cause and that is consecrated by the best blood of these three peoples shed upon the battlefields of heroic France.

"Under these circumstances I have no doubt of the great wisdom of the President in not attempting to formulate in precise treaty language our rights and obligations; better this whole-hearted, spontaneous co-operation up to the end of the struggle. With victory will come the necessity for a readjustment of the world on better lines and for the inauguration of a system which will prevent such a hideous calamity. That, in bringing this about, the three great peoples of the world who will have won this victory must stand together, is obvious. Such solidarity will be dictated by a common interest, common sympathy, and a common heritage of heroic memories. The form that this should take is something to be dictated by considerations which may best assure us tranquillity upon the basis of law and justice and an opportunity of recovery from the devastating effects upon national life of the attack by the great predatory nation."

Mr. Coudert spoke especially of France and Great Britain, but he made it plain that his thought included the other nations associated with us as our virtual "allies."

"There is in the United States a widespread sympathy," he said, "with the generous and valiant Italian people, who, despite the attempt of their statesmen to bind them to formal alliance with the Central Powers, chose to throw in their lot with the free democracies and form with them an integral whole in the great struggle against Teutonism.

"For Belgium we must ever have most admiring sympathy, for it was her choice, between peace with dishonor and hideous torture with slavery, that gave the French Army time to mobilize and save the situation in those critical days at the Marne."

Concerning the part for us to take, now and in the future, in political and other conferences among the allied nations, Mr. Coudert pointed out that the President's utterances had made our interest and co-operation plain.

"As to what part we should take in political conferences and the readjustment of European affairs," he said, "I can only say that, as I read the President's admirable messages on this subject, they make it plain that the influence of America must and will ultimately be felt in the disposition of all those questions which will make for world peace. As he so happily said in his last inaugural, 'We are provincials no longer.' Moreover, no settlement to which the United States was not a party could well be deemed permanent, and I have no doubt that our French and British brethren would be the first to ask for the advice and co-operation of the United States in any suggested settlement of European affairs.

"We can now realize that modern methods of transportation have made the world a small place in comparison with what it was in the days of the wars of the French Revolution, and that European affairs are, indeed, world affairs, and that no important readjustment can take place in European affairs which is not felt in Africa, America or Asia. It has required this great war to teach this fact to our public, but I believe it to be fully understood by our statesmen, and I think the era of parochial thinking is about to come to a close under the necessities of the situation and the stimulus of the great war."

From discussing the question of possible alliances after the war, Mr. Coudert went back to the history of our nation and to that famous warning against "entangling alliances" that has been quoted so often in the last four years.

"The situation after the war will be so markedly different from that heretofore existing that it seems almost absurd to prognosticate," he said. "It is even vainer, however, to assume that, because we have in the past been guided by a certain idea of foreign policy, we must necessarily continue to follow it. Our relations with foreign powers must ever be dependent upon our interests, our sentiments, and the circumstances of the time.

"The United States of today—economically, geographically, militarily—bears little resemblance to that Commonwealth of thirteen States along the Atlantic Ocean over which the great Washington presided. Modern invention has immeasurably decreased the influence of distance, and has thereby revolutionized world politics. Two and a half million scattered settlers in the little free Commonwealth along the Atlantic seaboard, removed from Europe by two months' traveling in slow sailing vessels, could have but little concern with the European policies of the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century, dominated as they were by dynastic interests and traditional enmities.

"The purpose of Washington was, by keeping us clear of foreign entanglements, to maintain our independence and give the new-born nation a breathing time in which to develop its commercial resources.

"It came as a rude awakening when, in 1898, the United States found that it was in a very real sense a world power. Yet long before that date its influence had been felt in European affairs; as far back as 1871 the intervention of the United States brought to a close differences between Spain and her colonies. When, in 1905, the President of the United States settled the Russo-Japanese war, we began to realize that no important settlement in Europe could take place without in some way affecting or being influenced by America.

"It is true that in the early part of the nineteenth century Europe appeared to possess those 'primary interests' of which Washington spoke, and with which the United States had no concern. Acting upon that policy, we contended for neutral rights as our interests actually dictated; yet, with every desire to keep out of the conflict, we were forced into war in 1812 to preserve those very neutral rights, dependent as they were upon the maintenance of international law. Thus, even at that early date, we might have learned that no general European conflict could be a matter of indifference to American interests.

"When the great war broke out many of us believed that America must inevitably be drawn in. The war was not merely European, but involved questions quite as vital to the United States as to Europe. We all know it now, but in 1914 the inherited point of view was that America still had her own separate interests and policies, and that we must keep clear of European entanglements.

"The American public did not find it easy to understand that the whole future of international law and free government was dependent upon the outcome of this war; that the whole Anglo-American system of law, government, and liberty was involved, and that America's interests, material and moral, in the outcome of the struggle were fundamental. A few wise men among us had long realized that a great struggle was imminent in Europe. Our own representatives had taken part in the Council of Algeciras, and we knew what the world was divided into two great alliances whose aims and purposes might soon come into conflict. One of the very wisest of our teachers, Admiral Mahan, had predicted the struggle, and the fact that our interests were those of England and France. Yet, in obedience to general public sentiment, neutrality was long essayed. The logic of events, stronger than that of the wisest philosopher, precipitated us into a conflict from which it is now easy to see that we never could have escaped. The fight was ours, whether we knew it or not, when the German horde went into Belgium.

"No great nation can longer stand alone in the world. Self-protection, if nothing else, calls upon us boldly and fearlessly to make our voice heard on the side of law and right, not only in war but in peace. Whether we shall have formal treaties with France and Great Britain is, to my mind, of little moment. Our controversies, if any, will be settled through judicial means, and our common interests will be protected by our representatives working together with those of France and Great Britain in common confidence.

"The alliance has come; it is here; it will stay. It will stand in the world for the judicial settlement of disputes; for fair opportunity in commercial dealing; for the rights of small nations; for the consent of the governed. It will speak in accordance with the best traditions of France, Great Britain, and the United States, and will serve to inaugurate, not a perfect but a better and wiser world, in which some substantial guarantees will exist for the substitution of law for force."

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

Notable Things in the Census of Our Denominational Churches.

Sunshine and shadows are in the latest census report of the denominational churches of America. The sunshine is in the information that, within the last decade, the total church membership in the United States has increased 19.9 per cent. and that the number of Sunday school scholars has increased 34.1 per cent. In other words, church membership has almost doubled the proportionate increase in population of the United States, while the Sunday schools have more than trebled the growth in population. The Sunday schools, too, are the feeders of the church. And as a result of the Sunday school record the churches have reason to expect an even larger percentage of growth within the coming ten years.

The shadows are in the fact that the percentage of increase in ministers has not kept pace with the growth in church membership, and that the total denominational membership in the United States is only 42,044,374. If the responses to the call of the ministry do not keep pace with the increase in members, the churches cannot expect to continue to grow. In a certain sense, the laity itself is to blame for the falling off in the relative number of ministers. Preachers' salaries are pitifully low. And while no man who consecrates his life to the ministry is dominated by the matter of salary, it is but right that he have reason to expect a comfortable living for himself and his family. It is regrettable, but true, that, with the present high prices of living, there are literally thousands of preachers who have difficulty in keeping respectable patches on their trousers. Ministers' salaries have not even approximately kept pace with the advanced costs of living.

And then that membership of 42,044,374, which means that out of every five persons one meets from day to day only two are church members. There is still, or has recently been, something wrong with denominational morality when in enlightened America it can attract only two persons out of every five. Preachers may object that the Church has too much competition. But that excuse will not hold. Whenever any organization or any aggregation of organizations gives the public value for value for its money, its time and attendance, the public will respond, be that organization a Billy Sunday revival, a political campaign, or a war for human liberty.

In justice to the present denominational organizations, however, it should be said that they are today fulfilling their functions more fully than at any time within the last half century. Can they but retain their present power and aggressiveness, it is merely a matter of time until they will have swept the nation into their ranks.—Milwaukee Journal.

400 Dresses, Were $39.50 to $59.50 at $25 to $39.50

Seven Typical Models Pictured and Described

The picture tells the story of their distinction of line and charm of decoration. It does not tell that the silks, laces and nets of which they are made are of first quality and that the effect of the dress before the eye is of extreme fashion and good value. They are, chiefly, manufacturers' close-outs of models of fabrics that cannot be duplicated at any price.

A—$55 Gown at $35. Silk lace and crepe meteor have been used in developing this model. Tunic effect, wide girdle, flower trimmed. In black and white.

B—$55 Gown at $39.50. Gown of all silk black lace combined with black taffeta. Wide girdle beaded in clusters; long, tightly fitting sleeves.

C—$59.50 Gown at $39.50. Allover net, beaded in an attractive design, tunic and underskirt of Georgette crepe, wide girdle also beaded; draped sleeves.

D—$39.50 Gown at $25. Embroidered net combined with taffeta silk, long tunic and flounce of the embroidery. In cream white.

E—$59.50 Gown at $39.50. Black silk lace Gown with panel of lace back and front, satin girdle and camisole; long draped sleeves of net.

F—$42.50 Gown at $29.50. Allover embroidered net, straight line long tunic effect, long sleeves. In rose and ecru.

G—$52.50 Gown at $35. Striking new model of checked taffeta silk, peg top skirt with insets of Georgette crepe and self folds, wide girdle in similar finish, long sleeves. Opened in back.

Other Gowns at $25, Values to $40 including Georgette crepe, crepe de chine, foulard silks, taffeta, etc., mostly in combinations of two materials; a silk with Georgette crepe. And almost endless variety of pretty models.

300 $25 Silk Dresses at $12.75

A very remarkable sale of these smart and pretty street and afternoon Frocks. It is a special point that the majority are in the extremely fashionable navy blue.

A striking model of plain gros de Londres has cluster ruffles at the sides, another of taffeta has a smartly draped tunic. A charming effect is produced by a union of striped satin with plain taffeta. Others combine taffeta and foulard, Georgette and foulard, etc. A taffeta Dress is heavily beaded in color. Some very pretty crepe de chine Frocks, braided with soutache, are also included.

Special Purchase of Blouses

Fine Qualities, Good Styles, Attractive

$2.39 for Values $3.50 and $4

OVER A THOUSAND BLOUSES in this special purchase, the number augmented by additions from our own stocks, of styles that cannot be reproduced to sell at their normal prices, and which, therefore, are closed out at much less than their real value. They are of Georgette crepe, crepe de chine and striped tub silks, tailored, demi-tailored and dress styles.

Those of Georgette crepe are prettily embroidered and finished with hemstitching, some with lace inserts. Mostly flesh and white, some maize.

Those of crepe de chine are demi-tailored; one style with embroidery on the revers; others with hemstitching. Some in high colors with collar and vestee in white.

Some of taffeta, the so-called "wash taffeta," tailored, with shawl collar. Others of Pekin striped tub silks and fancy shirtings, with roll and tie end collars.

None C. O. D., no mail or telephone orders filled.

Boys' Suits, $6.75 : Amazing

AS A NEW MEASURE of wool conservation, a large clothing manufacturer, at our suggestion, made up all ends of better grade suitings, left after completing his spring orders, into boys' Suits instead of sample swatches.

And although the grade of material, the workmanship and the class of tailoring put into them are worth a good $10 in almost every Suit, we got them low enough to sell at $6.75 because only one or, at most, three Suits could be made of a pattern.

However, that only means a wider variety, a greater number, of fine spring patterns to choose from—and since every size is represented in the range, every mother may come assured that she will find here her chance for a fine economy.

Boys' Wash Suits, $1.65

This is the "cleanup" of this season's models of a line admittedly unsurpassed for smartness. Almost every style—Norfolk, Middy, long or short sleeve—that was ever dreamed of for smart tub Suits, is here; the coolest and best washing practical materials—chambrays, linenes, peggy cloth, etc., and every color or stripe—blue, gray, green, brown, tan—is GUARANTEED to remain fast. Sizes from 3 to 8. An opportunity to save money on a summer's supply.

MILITARY CRITIC ANALYZES SITUATION ON WAR FRONTS

Delay Between Attacks in France Now Works to the Advantage of the Allies —Austrian Attack on Brescia and Milan Likely Before Long

Troops of the Allies on Both Fronts in Strong Position for Defense

BY A MILITARY EXPERT.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

BY the long delay since the end of the fighting about Kemmel both sides gained a certain advantage. The greater advantage accrued to the Allies. When the fighting was at its height, Germany unquestionably had the advantage of numbers at the points of contact. She had effected her concentrations of men to the extent of two-thirds of her entire number against the front which she intended to attack, weakening the remainder of the front for this purpose. The Allies did not dare make a similar move until the attack had developed to the point that they could be sure it was to be a major effort rather than a diversion.

To concentrate sufficient men to meet such an effort as the Germans launched involved a strain on transport facilities beyond anything that the war had produced up to that time. To gather together and rush to the threatened points artillery to replace that which had been captured and destroyed by the German attack further complicated the situation. The remedy involved time, much time. Every day gained was an advantage, but many days were necessary in order to meet the German strength with equal strength.

GERMAN DEFEAT HELPFUL.

The German defeat at Kemmel was, therefore, a godsend in this respect. It made necessary the withdrawal of many German divisions either to be replaced by others, which, through inactivity, were still fresh, or to be refitted and re-formed. This took time, and gave the Allies what they most badly needed, respite in which to gather their forces for defense.

There was, however, a limit of time beyond which delay did not serve the Allies. Once the German strength was matched, the men concentrated, the artillery placed in force, the trench defenses prepared, time ceased to be of advantage, except in so far as the troops that we have sent and are still sending might be of assistance. This assistance, however, is dubious. Such men cannot be put into the fight without further training under actual fighting conditions, the period as determined by past experience of other nations being about ten or twelve weeks. The American forces will make good material for the strategic reserve, of course, but not for the fighting in this particular battle.

Germany, on the other hand, has had time to prepare for this offensive in the same careful manner in which she prepared for the first. Her task, while not as great as that of the Allies, has, nevertheless, been colossal. In one respect, indeed, it has been even greater than that of the Allies. While she had her men, and at some distance in the rear her guns, the question of an advance is linked up indissolubly with that of transport of munitions. The country over which the advance was made had been torn to pieces by the Germans themselves in their retreat. It had been further damaged by the Allies as they fell back. The roads had, as a result, become practically impassable and had to be rebuilt. Railroads had to be laid, new bases established, new stocks of ammunition accumulated. This activity has been pushed, we may be certain, as rapidly as possible. Divisions have been refitted and reinforced; the entire German Army, which is to take part in the attack, has received the most careful attention in every detail. But the Germans have had since April 27 to bring all this about—over three full weeks. When they strike again, therefore, they will be ready.

ALLIES NOW READY.

But the net results favor the Allies. They know now where Germany will attack—not the exact location, perhaps, but within reasonable limits—they can, therefore, not be surprised. They have brought up their strength, and, although they are, perhaps, not equal in numbers to the Germans, they have, nevertheless, established an equilibrium. In artillery they have made up their losses and have accumulated a new stock of ammunition for their new gun positions. They have, in some central point of the fighting zone, a large reservoir of reserves, certainly much larger than that of Germany, with which they can either strike out in an independent action or feed the fighting line as the situation and the judgment of their commander dictates.

The Germans have, however, mustered their greatest strength and think that they can win. There can be no doubt that, if the German command sends the German troops into another offensive operation, it is because it is figured that there is a chance of victory. The German leaders have undoubtedly prepared means by which every advantage can be followed up rapidly, and if the defensive zone of the Allies is penetrated as it was before, to follow through the break in the lines without delay. When the attack fails—and an attack is inevitable—the moment will be the most serious for the Allies of the entire war.

Both sides are poised for the blow. It may fall any day. But, if it fails, Germany has shot her bolt; she has gambled with her last stake, and she can only fall back into her trenches, fortify them, and try to stay defeat. She will gain ground in this next attack. It is inevitable that she should. Against any conceivable defense, any position can be gained at a price. Germany will not stop at price in her next effort. It will be an effort to win, and, if she succeeds, will be worth the price.

AUSTRIAN ATTACK COMING?

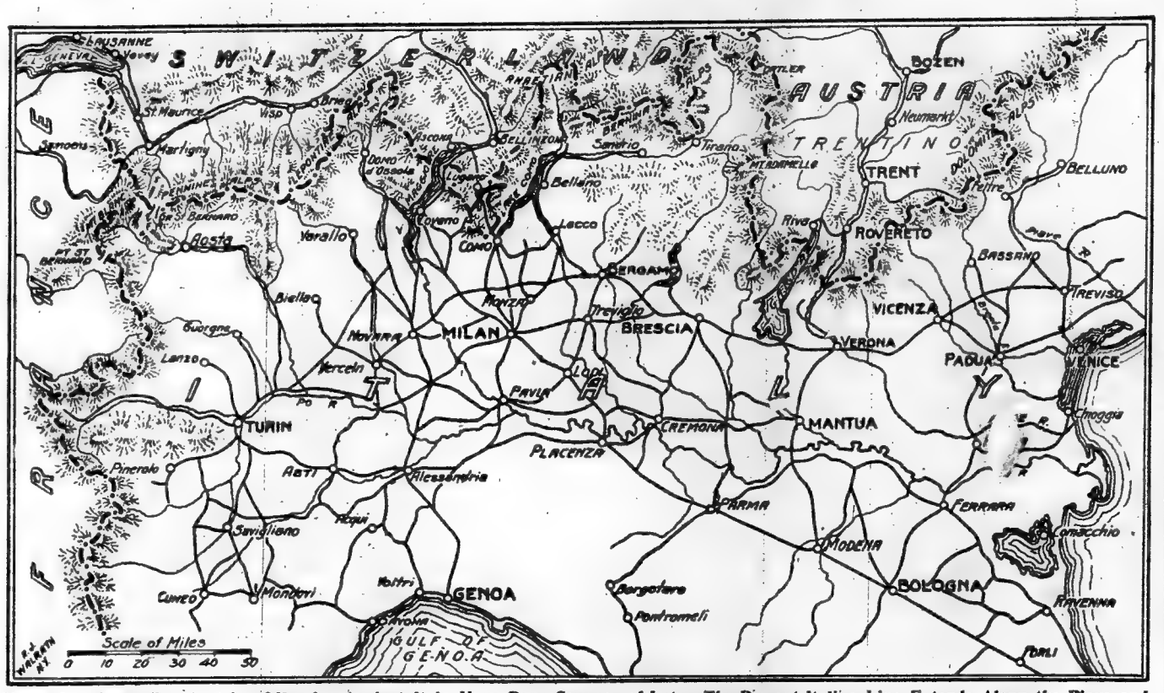
Rumors are persistent that heavy Austrian concentrations have been discovered in Italy, the area of concentration being in Trentino. From Trentino the Austrians can strike in either one of two places. The first is on the front east of Lake Garda, in the mountain area between the lake and the Piave River. The other is west of the lake through the Chiese Valley and the Passes of Lorina or of Noveza, which is just west of the lake shore. In the latter cases the object of the attack would be the railroad from Milan through Brescia to Verona and Vicenza. This is the main lifeline of the Italian forces.

While it is true that the ideal railroad situation for an army in the field is a series of railroads coming perpendicular to the front and feeding a number of main bases, and another road in conjunction with these, tying the bases together and running parallel to the front for the purpose of distribution of the supplies, the railroad in Italy from Milan to Vicenza offers advantages nearly as great, although it does parallel the front throughout. In the first place, it is admirably assisted by the railroad through Piacenza to Bologna, which almost parallels it at varying distances to the south. From the latter run numerous subsidiary lines connecting the two railroads. One runs to Brescia, one to Verona through Mantua, and one to Padua. This gives the Italians an excellent string of bases, all of which are served by two railroads.

POSITIONS BEHIND THE PIAVE.

But the lifeline of the entire structure is the first-mentioned road from Milan to Vicenza, upon which the distribution of the entire supply system depends. If this road could be cut it would cause the Italians the greatest inconvenience, if indeed it did not involve a serious retreat. This might well, therefore, be one of the Austrian objects, should Austria attack.

But this railroad does more than that in so far as its effect on the Italian defense is concerned. The Italian line, as at present constituted, runs from the sea along the Piave to a point northwest of Treviso where the river bends to the north, when it breaks westward through the mountains and winds its way sinuously to Trentino, where it turns north following the western Trentino boundary. Behind the line of the Piave, which proved the great stumbling block to the Teutonic advance of last Fall, there are several good defensive positions, the defense being made possible by the screen of a river which runs before them. If the Italians were driven from their position on the west bank of the Piave, they could, with small sacrifice from a military point of view, fall back to the Brenta and make their defense there. This would, of course, involve the fall of Venice, which would be a very great blow to the civilization of the world. That the Germans with their lust for destruction and desecration of all the world's beauties should ever conquer Venice is almost unthinkable. But from a purely military viewpoint the Italian situation would not be seriously impaired if the defensive line was behind the Brenta rather than behind the Piave.



Signs of an Impending Austrian Offensive Against Italy Have Been Common of Late—The Present Italian Line Extends Along the Piave and Then Westward Along the Mountain Wall Which Forms the Italian Frontier.

MAY STRIKE DOUBLE BLOW.

Behind the Brenta, again, is the valley of the Adige, an even more formidable line than that of the Brenta. It was along the Adige, indeed, that it was presumed the Italians would halt last year, when, to the surprise of the world, they stopped on the Piave and threw back the invaders on that line. Much further back still is the line of the Po, probably the strongest defensive position in Northern Italy. But if the Italians were forced back to the Po it would mean the sacrifice of practically the entire plain of Northern Italy. These are the most important defensive positions to which the Italians could retire successively if the line on the Piave were forced.

But the Austrian concentration is not along the Piave, if we may accept the reports, but in Trentino. This would seem to mean that a double blow is pending, a blow against the railroad from Milan to Vicenza and a blow from behind the Adige defenses. If the enemy reached the railroad, as I have indicated, it would be almost fatal to the Italian defense, which would probably be forced to give way through failure of supplies. But it would also flank the Adige line and compel the Italians to fall back all the way to the Po. A halt could not be made on any one of the other defensive positions mentioned. They would, of course, also be turned the very moment the Adige positions were outflanked.

A successful Austrian campaign against the Italians either close to the eastern bank of Lake Garda or along the western bank would be disastrous. If there is anything in the statement that history repeats itself, however, Austria will think twice before she attempts any offensive along the shores of Lake Garda. It was here that Napoleon absolutely destroyed two Austrian armies in one of his early Italian campaigns. In this case, two Austrian armies came down through the valley of the Adige and followed the shores of the lake, one on either side, the object being to raise the siege of Mantua which Napoleon was conducting. He attacked first one army and then the other, destroying them both before they could co-operate or be of the slightest assistance to each other. This old battleground, then, is one which is filled with evil memories for the Austrians; the incident mentioned was but one of several similar ones that happened while the siege of Mantua was going on.

ITALIANS ARE SUPERIOR.

Aside from all this, however, there are other difficulties much more tangible than the memories of previous disasters in the time of Napoleon. The first is the fact that the Italian Army is the superior of the Austrian and has been ever since the war began. Austria has been able to defeat no one at any time. Her troops are inferior to the Italians in both quantity and quality. Her artillery is at least no better, if, indeed, it is as good. The only remaining element is the supply of ammunition. In spite of the tragic happenings of last Fall, when the failure of the European Allies to realize the possibilities of the Italian situation prevented them from sending help to Italy at a crucial time, and the failure of the United States to declare war on Austria prevented us from sending arms for use against a people with whom we were at peace, it is practically certain that Italy is provided with enough guns and shell to defend herself.

There is but one front now, under one commander, so that we may be assured that what Italy needs will be supplied. There is further the topographical problem, which is most heavily on Italy's side. Austria did make one offensive against Italy on this front which promised to be successful but was nipped just as it was getting under way and rolled back to good advantage. With all of the advantages the Italians possess, it is difficult to see how Austria can do very much damage. Even in the element of numbers the Italians have the advantage, as they decidedly outnumber the Austrians in spite of the disastrous losses of last Fall. There is, of course, the unanswered question as to the extent to which the Italians in the north have become rotted through the influences of a socialistic, pacifistic, German propaganda, like that which destroyed the moral and fighting strength of the 2d Army at Tolmino last year. But having learned their lesson once, it is most unlikely that such a débâcle should be repeated.

ACTIVITY OF ITALIANS.

Instead of an Austrian attack, such fighting as has occurred has been on the initiative of the Italians. Southeast of Roverto, in what might be termed the Pasubio district, there is a very lofty plateau known as Col Santo. On the brink of this plateau, on its southern side, there rises up abruptly a high peak, Monte Corno, which overlooks the entire valley of Arsa, one of the main exits from the valley of the Adige to the plain of Northern Italy. In a sudden attack the Italians stormed Monte Corno and seized the entire height. The Austrians almost immediately reacted and attempted to retake the position, but, after hard fighting, were forced to desist, leaving the Italians in possession. This appeared to be a signal for a series of attacks and counter-attacks on various portions of the line, but without any definite results except at this one point. The weather which has held this country snow-bound for months is breaking up and, although there is still snow in the mountains, it is fast disappearing. There may, therefore, be serious activity here before many weeks have passed.

The contour of the Italian lines is not particularly favorable for decisive action. The Italians are operating on the inside of a circle, a fact which gives them certain advantages in the matter of short communications, interior lines, and facility of supplies. It is a much more simple battleline to defend for these reasons. On the other hand, it is not a favorable situation from which to attack, as even a very material gain produces but little effect. The Austrians can simply yield ground and permit the Italians to advance without themselves suffering much inconvenience. On the other hand, a relatively minor gain by the Austrians against either one of the sides of the circle could well threaten a vital line of supplies and force a rapid change in the situation. In brief, the elements of the situation, in so far as they are concerned with the configuration of the battleline, are just the reverse of those existing in France.

HOW BIG AN ARMY?

Secretary Baker's Plan for Blanket Presidential Authority Under a $15,000,000,000 Budget—Others See Advantages in a Fixed Goal.

HOW big an army to defeat Germany? An army of an undetermined size, to be increased to the required conquering force as the needs arise, or an army of a definite number fixed in advance as an aim on which all national efforts are to converge?

Congress will answer this question soon in passing on Secretary Baker's new army program, which asks for an appropriation of $15,000,000,000, that the President be authorized to call out as many men as are needed to win the war.

On the side of bestowing this order in blank on the President is the argument that it is not practicable to designate the size of the army, that the number of soldiers we can make effective on the battlefront depends on ship tonnage expansion, and therefore that the legislation should be elastic to allow adjustment to this changing situation. That is the view taken by Senator Charles S. Thomas, Democratic member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

By the opposition the contention is made that no undertaking, least of all a great one, can be carried forward with assurance of success unless there is a prescribed goal. The soldier aims at a target, so should the War Department, is one way of putting it; another is with regard to the Liberty Loans, that they are definite, and move with increasing momentum toward the goal. It is contended, further, that the backwardness of some parts of the present program, as in ordnance and aircraft, calls for a full and definite statement of program now. This is the position taken by Senator Harry S. New, Republican member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

"We must have a definite plan," said Senator New, "with a minimum of 3,000,000 men. Right now all the new men should be going to the cantonments; if they are not there soon, we may be sure that they will not be ready for fighting by the Spring of 1919.

"We have been in the war more than twelve months, and the plain truth is that at this time we have not any men trained to the fullest extent for the front trenches. This is nothing against our men; they learn more quickly than any of the others, but the requirement of long preparatory training is a condition of modern war. All the plans should be worked out for 3,000,000 men, along all needs.

"So far we have had to get many things from our allies—clothing, airplanes, guns. Every detail should be worked out, or men and equipment will not be ready. I think we have accomplished much, but our present situation—the delay in important parts of the program—shows the lack of definite planning in advance. I am willing to give all the latitude desired above 3,000,000, but I think the minimum should be fixed there."

Through both the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees there is a dividing line on the question of blanket authority to raise an army, and the cleavage is not always along party lines. S. Hubert Dent, Jr., Democratic Chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, is in favor of an army of 5,000,000, though in accord with the Administration's plans in other respects. Julius Kahn, Republican member of the committee, is a strong advocate of the Secretary of War's program. These opinions from other members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, while dividing along the general line, show each individual variation:

"I do not think we need to fix a minimum of men to be raised, nor a maximum," said Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, Democrat. "It all depends on how many we can transport and how many we can take care of after we get them over there. I think it should be left to the President."

Senator Howard Sutherland, Republican, said: "I don't think Congress should abdicate its power, conferred on it by the Constitution, to raise armies for the defense of the country. I am of the opinion that Congress should be told in advance what this money is to be spent for—that is, how many soldiers are to be raised. We should know what is to be spent in every branch of this new war program, and should have an opportunity to investigate these estimates. The cards should be on the table. There is no need for Congress to grant blanket authority to raise an army. Congress will be in session and can provide for increases as they are needed."

Senator Chamberlain, Democrat, said: "I think it is difficult to fix the number of men, as it depends on the shipping. I think the authority should be given to raise as many as possible."

"I am in favor of an army of 5,000,000 men," said Senator John W. Weeks, Republican; "I think Congress will fix the number of men to be raised, as it should. We cannot expect to send our men much faster than 100,000 a month for the present. It depends on the shipping. New men should be called just as fast as trained ones are sent over."

On the House Military Affairs Committee there is less opposition to the Baker program than on the Senate Committee, indicating that this comparison may hold true so far as the Senate and House as a whole are concerned. Chairman Dent of the House committee said:

"I am in favor of granting whatever money the War Department needs, and I am in favor of authorizing an army of 5,000,000 men. I think the psychological effect both on this country and Germany would be of much value. It would stimulate our people to know we had a definite goal in view."

"I am in favor of granting to the President the authority to call as large an army as is needed, to any size," said Julius Kahn, Republican member. "Congress need not be afraid of abdicating any power. We really fix the number of men in the amount of money we appropriate, and will always retain that control. I think to give the President the authority to raise any number he deems necessary to win the war will have a greater psychological effect than to name a number. It shows that we intend to put no limitation on the force we will put under arms to win the war.

"I think, too, we should feel encouraged over what we have accomplished so far. Some of our factories are behind, but we may expect a decided improvement from now on. We should remember the delays and difficulties other countries had in their first year of war."

William J. Fields, Democratic member of the House Committee, does not think psychology will have any effect on winning the war one way or the other.

"It will take men and steel to defeat the Germans," said Mr. Fields. "I think it is a quibble as to whether the President shall have authority to call out any number of men he desires or whether we in Congress shall fix the number. I think we will grant him whatever is asked. In military matters we are ready to accept the recommendations of our military men, but as to civil matters we will use our own judgment."

Thomas S. Crago, Republican member, said: "I think it is right to leave it to the President. It isn't fixing the minimum; it is taking off the maximum. If we said 5,000,000 men, the President need not call but 2,000,000 if that were his judgment. That is, we have no way to compel him to call a certain number of men; we can only make provisions for his calling them. It is to be presumed that the President will call all that is necessary, and I am in favor of giving him all he wants."

A. C. Shallenberger, Republican member and former Governor of Nebraska, thinks the rising cost of equipping soldiers as represented in the new appropriation presents a question of more importance than whether the President have power to call out any number of men desired.

"I have heard it stated on good authority," said Mr. Shallenberger, "that Germany can maintain 10,000,000 men in the field for what it costs us to maintain 1,000,000 there. We, of course, have the added cost of transportation over a great distance, not only in this country in assembling our troops, but the much greater cost of getting across the ocean. We cannot stop for expense; we are in to win, and we must win, but we should realize what we have to face and keep down costs in other ways and dispense with extravagance of all kinds. Few people are aware how much more a soldier costs us than Germany or any other European country. Our standards are higher. We clothe them better, feed them better, and pay them better. In fact, England is the only country that bears comparison with us.

"France and Great Britain follow the rule of keeping one man in reserve for every man at the front; but we, to be on an equal footing for emergencies, should have two men in training here for every man we have in France, and I think this is one thing we should take account of in raising new forces. It would not seem likely that we are in danger of having too many trained soldiers on hand, considering what France and Great Britain have had to face in replacements."

Senator Thomas, on the subject of war expenditures, said:

"We are in to win this war and we cannot afford to stop, no matter how great the cost; but we are going to have to cut out extravagance wherever possible. Up to this time it has been about the most unpopular thing a man could do on the floor of the Senate to speak of extravagance."

There is no doubt that Secretary Baker's call for $15,000,000,000 to finance the army during the next fiscal year gave Congress the greatest shock it has had this session. Before he went to Europe, according to a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, he laid before that body tentative plans for an increase of 1,500,000 in the army at an estimated cost of between $7,000,000,000 and $8,000,000,000. After the German drive it was recognized on all sides that a much larger army would be required.

There is no sign of a disposition on the part of Congress not to grant all that is needed, but the demand for detailed plans for war expenditure will be more insistent than heretofore. This is especially true of the Senate. The Military Affairs Committee of that body was recently increased by the addition of two members, Senators Hoke Smith, Democrat, and Philander C. Knox, Republican, in order to be better prepared, through organization into sub-committees, to carry on its work. Secretary Baker's plans, when they reach that committee, will be subjected to exacting scrutiny.

GIRL FOOD SAVERS

College Students Organize All Over the Country to Help Hoover's Campaign to Win the War by Supplying Needs of Our Allies in Europe.

WAY for the college girls! Way, and a cheer! For, by tens of thousands, they are hard at work getting ready to take their places in the front lines of the battle to furnish the food that will win the war. Seven hundred colleges, universities, and normal schools are enrolled in the movement, and a big proportion of the girls in every one of them is taking the course outlined for the work by the Food Administration. The College Girls' Food-Will-Win-the-War Army numbers somewhere between one hundred thousand and two hundred thousand members.

The idea was born early this year, and it struck root so quickly and grew so rapidly that the Food Administration has had hard work to keep up with it in the development of the plan and the furnishing of the directive force. From the start Mr. Hoover has had faith in the possibilities of the scheme, and he feels sure that the food situation will be benefited greatly by the efforts of all these young women.

The development and direction of the scheme are in the hands of Olin Templin, Director of the Collegiate Section of the Food Administration, who set the wheels turning by sending a letter last January to the Presidents of colleges, universities, and normal schools having women students asking if they were willing to offer these students emergency courses of study that would train them for intelligent co-operation with the Food Administration. Mr. Templin and his assistants were almost overwhelmed by the flood of enthusiastic responses that poured in.

A committee of experts on the food situation in its relation to the war, on foods and food values and on training in home economics, devised an outline of three courses to be given in succession, or together if they are properly dovetailed. In February the work began in seven hundred institutions scattered all over the country. All the lessons of all three courses are prepared and issued in co-operation with the Federal Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Education.

The aim of the first course is to give the students a broad general understanding of the food problem in its geographic, economic, nutritional, and military aspects. It also outlines the history and organization of the Food Administration, its purposes and policies, and what has been done in the matter of food control by the other nations at war. The second course develops the nutritional aspect of the problem and studies food values, food production, food conservation, and the relation between individual effort and national need. The third course is of a laboratory nature and makes practical application of the principles studied in the previous courses.

Special attention is given all through the work to such training as will enable young women to become leaders in their own communities in the dissemination of what they have learned. They may limit their endeavors to their own families, or they may work in women's clubs or in connection with some community movement, or simply by talk and persuasion among their friends and acquaintances. But it is impressed upon every girl who takes these courses that she must do all she can to enlighten people who need information as to why we must save food, why certain kinds of food must be used at home more than before, why it is all a matter of individual responsibility, how great that responsibility is and the methods by which it can be met. Thus they will become important agents, each in her own little circle of influence, in forwarding the vital democratic purpose of intelligent and voluntary co-operation by the individual with the Government.

As an example of the work that is being done, the treatment of the wheat situation shows how thorough for an emergency course is the training. The importance of wheat as a possible deciding factor in the war is brought out, and then the students take up the causes and extent of the wheat shortage. They learn what were the sources of the world's wheat supply before the war, study the effect of the war upon each of the countries which formerly either fed itself or exported part of its product, and the situation this year in each of these lands. Then consideration of our obligations and promises to our allies leads to the facts and dimensions of the shortage in this country. Naked facts are faced, the limitations we must put on ourselves are clearly shown, the effects of last Winter's blizzards and railroad congestion considered, and the results of wheat shortage in its effect upon physical state and morale are brought out, followed by a study of what the United States is doing to meet the wheat shortage by stimulating production, eliminating speculation and hoarding, and other means. In the other two courses the methods of control of the wheat situation are described in more detail, and the chemical and nutritional sides of the problem have full consideration.

State leaders are being chosen to take charge of the voluntary services which the young women will render after completion of the courses, when they return to their homes at the end of the academic year. The State Food Administrator will recommend names for this State leadership, and much care will be exercised to select women for the work who will not only have the qualities of leadership and understand the situation and the needs in their respective States, but will also understand college girls and appreciate the kind and the value of the work they can do. Each college girl who completes the three courses and passes the examinations in them creditably will receive a certificate stating what she has done and recommending her to Food Administrators for appropriate services. Each girl who gets such a certificate is expected to enroll in a State organization and in the local organization formed in her college and give as much time as circumstances permit to the work.

J. GORDON BENNETT, EDITOR BY CABLE

Late Owner of The Herald Too Much the Faddist to be a Great Newspaper Man, Former Employe Thinks

By JAMES B. TOWNSEND.

THROUGH thirty-five years in New York daily journalism, it was my privilege to be thrown into more or less intimate editorial connection with such newspaper owners and editors as William Henry Hurlbert of The World, Whitelaw Reid of The Tribune, Joseph Pulitzer of The World, and James Gordon Bennett of The Herald, who died in France last Tuesday. Of these personalities, contrasted as they were, that of Mr. Bennett always seemed to me to be the most difficult to understand from any ordinary viewpoint. Sometimes during my years of service on The Herald I flattered myself that I had learned to understand the "Commodore," as he was always called in The Herald office, but always was I brought sooner or later to the knowledge of my error. In fact, I doubt whether Mr. Bennett ever understood himself.

From the viewpoint of an old journalist, I do not think Mr. Bennett measured up as a great newspaper man with any of the others I have named. That he had good news sense there can be no question. He proved the possession of this early in his ownership of The Herald by the Stanley-Livingston exploit, the Jeannette expedition, and the development of The Herald's shipping news and weather reports, but these feats were not repeated in kind, and as the years passed his energies were apparently more and more devoted to the trivial side of human activities and life—the extensive chronicling of society happenings and the effort to increase The Herald's circulation by sensational devices, eccentricities of type display, bizarre treatment of the news of the day, &c. Ability he had, flashes of great ability, but he was so changeable, so mercurial, so actuated by suspicion of others, so carried away by the whim of the moment, that often his enterprises turned awry.

Employes here and in The Paris Herald lived and worked in and for the moment, not knowing what an hour would bring forth, nor whether or not their positions would last through any day. Life in The Herald offices had the quality of adventure, with the "Commodore" present, if only for the few days between the arriving and "steaming" of a transatlantic ship; or with the cables working between Paris or some other more remote point and New York. The only respite from suspense was when the "Commodore" was out of touch with the cable on some long cruise in his yacht.

In charge for some years of the daily cable news from The Herald office here to The London Telegraph and The Paris Herald, my work necessarily came under the "Commodore's" observation and close supervision. The rule was to send the important American news to London and the lighter to Paris. A larger quota of words was, therefore, given to London, and this quota had to be observed, so that, if possible, the average at the end of any month would not exceed a certain amount, and thus make the cable toll bills too high for the "Commodore's" liking; for while extravagant in his personal expenditures, he was, even in the Herald's palmiest days, a "canny Scot" as to the paper's expenses.

Well do I recall the time when the "Commodore," during the last yellow fever epidemic in the West Indies, cabled to have three eminent New York physicians sent to Cuba, Porto Rico, and Santo Domingo. Now it so happened that there was no fever in Porto Rico and the clever doctor who was commissioned to visit that island, finding his job missing, and doubtless knowing the "Commodore's" love of sensation, wrote an entire page on the ravages of the hookworm disease.

I cabled the whole of the hookworm story, which was most sensational, and having largely exceeded, in consequence, my monthly quota to The Paris Herald, awaited the result in fear. But no word came, The Paris Herald printed the entire story and long afterward I was told by the "Commodore": "That was a good story about the hookworm in Porto Rico. I don't believe a word of it, but you did well to cable it entire."

The Paris edition of The Herald had no Sunday issue, and on a certain Saturday night the son of Richard Croker was killed in an automobile accident at Ormond, Fla. Supposing that the main news would have reached Paris from London by Monday, I sent some additional details for Tuesday's issue. This was the "Commodore's" first intimation of the accident, and he cabled, addressing me as "Dogtown," (because he had given all Herald editors a cable code word address in which the word "dog" preceded the first syllable of their names) as follows:

"Kindly inform me by cable how and why Frank Croker was killed at Ormond. Was it while swimming or flying in a boat or in the air? Why a reference to wheels?—James Gordon Bennett."

Then only it dawned upon me that Mr. Bennett had not heard on Monday of the accident and was quite as much interested in it, owing to his devotion to automobiling, as in the Russian revolution, then under way. The entire story was at once cabled, but it was some time before I was restored to favor.

This incident proved to my mind, if other proofs had been wanting, that Mr. Bennett had too many "fads" and too many whims to be a great newspaper man. They diverted him, often at crucial times, from the really larger news interests. He sometimes played ad nauseam on one note or idea that struck his fancy, witness, the wearisome "Old Philadelphia Lady" daily query, repeated for years in The Paris Herald, as to the difference between the Centigrade and Fahrenheit thermometers, and giving of disproportionate space, even when great events were happening, to the most trivial society doings, especially in Summer at Newport.

He explained the "Old Philadelphia Lady" query to me in Paris by saying that just so long as there was an average income of jocose but more often indignant and abusive letters about this letter at the Paris Herald office he would continue to publish it.

He said the average American was more interested in gossip about his neighbors' affairs and notice of himself and his people than in more serious matters. He therefore considered it more important to have a long and good list of people, prominent or supposedly prominent, at the opera, theatre, or even a horse race, than any critical or well-written story of the event itself. His theory was that The Herald had no use for individual critical, or, indeed, any especial opinion on theatrical, musical, or art matters. The men or women sent to "cover" such affairs were simply reporters, commissioned to reflect the opinions of the audiences. He thought it more important that Mrs. Astorbilt was in her opera box than that an opera was well or badly given. He never permitted any Herald employe to call himself or allow himself to be called the Herald critic of any activity.

The keen interest Mr. Bennett took in society doings here and in Europe, except in England, (for he never overcame a deep dislike of England after the failure of the London edition of The Herald,) was due to the fact that he figured largely in the social life of New York and Newport for many years as a younger man, when that life was a narrower and more intimate one. Mortification followed his duel with the late Frederick May—the cause of which it is not necessary to rehearse now—when he found even former stanch friends arrayed against him, and he became a voluntary exile and never really repatriated himself. Paradoxically also, although he gave great publicity oftentimes to others, he shunned it himself. I found him really shy as to his own doings.

For some time The Paris Herald was not in favor with the French authorities, for what reason I know not, and Mr. Bennett never received the Legion of Honor decoration, although he was always a devoted friend to France. He once published a letter on the subject of the decoration and headed it "An Honor Few Escape," and again published as a headline to a letter from an American, asking what the red ribbon was: "The decoration of the Legion of Honor—chiefly worn to impress the concierge."

The Paris Herald published daily long or short stories from all the European resorts of any consequence, and these, when it was possible, were written by members of the nobility, who did not disdain the opportunity thus to turn an honest penny. Some of these used their connection with The Herald, at times, in a way that caused Mr. Bennett trouble and annoyance, but he persisted in the employment of society men and women, titled, when possible. The English of some of these correspondents was frequently, even when edited, weird.

Mr. Bennett treated some of his employes well, and turned others off peremptorily, sometimes after long years of faithful service, often for a trivial mistake. The older men he found in The Herald office when he took charge, mostly graduates of Trinity College in Dublin and protégés of his father, he retained as long as possible, and then, as a rule, pensioned them. He had an intense devotion to his parents' memory. And he loved animals, and especially dogs, and this was a redeeming trait. On the whole, I can say that his virtues balanced in many ways his faults. He would never employ again in The Herald service a man who had resigned, for this he always resented, but he frequently took back men he had discharged.

The influence of the present Mrs. Bennett upon the "Commodore's" life has been marked, and he was a changed man long before his marriage to her, which was deferred for years because, although unhappily married, she did not wish a divorce from Baron de Reuter. She was a widow of two years when she married Mr. Bennett.

AIRPLANE POSTAGE STAMPS

THE most interesting postage stamp at the present time to collectors is the new twenty-four-cent airplane service stamp just issued by the Government and used for the first time last Wednesday. It is a small, oblong stamp in two colors, red and blue, an airplane of the biplane type being within the blue central portion of the stamp. It is about the size of the Pan-American special issue of 1901, the last stamps issued by the Post Office Department in two colors until the appearance of the recent stamp.

Copies of the new stamp properly postmarked, showing that it was used for postage on the initial trip of the airplane service, were offered last week by dealers for $1 apiece. To commemorate the aerial service the Post Office Department added the line "First Trip" in the circular postmark, also designating whether it was canceled at Washington, Philadelphia, or New York. Subsequent trips will not bear any number. Those used on the later trips may be worth 5 or 10 cents. What the future value of the new twenty-four-cent stamp may be is problematical. One New York dealer had 400 envelopes addressed to him on the first aerial trip and other dealers had from 100 to 200.

The United States has had no twenty-four-cent stamp since the issue of 1870. The first stamp of that value was issued in 1860, being imperforate, as were all the first postal stamp issue in 1851. Very few of these imperforate twenty-four-cent copies are known, and unused copies are quoted at from $175 to $200. The second issue of 1857 was perforate, as have been all subsequent issues, and the twenty-four-cent stamp of this issue is not scarce. These stamps were lilac in color, with the portrait of Washington.

In 1869 the United States used two colors for some of its stamps, among them being the twenty-four-cent variety, in green and lilac, with a very fine engraving of Trumbull's painting of the Declaration of Independence. By a mistake, some of these stamps were printed with inverted centres, but only a few got out to the public, and as a result of the error they are among the scarcest United States stamps. In the Worthington sale last August an unused copy of the 1869 twenty-four-cent stamp, said to be the only one known, brought $2,850, and a canceled copy brought $405.

The new stamp is the fourth that has been issued by any country with the figure of an airplane. One was issued by the United States in 1913, being the twenty-cent parcel post stamp, which showed an airplane carrying mail, anticipating by a short period the reality of that event. The second was one of a special war series issued two years ago by Austria, and the third is the Cuban special delivery stamp, showing a monoplane and still in use in that country.

ANECDOTES ABOUT J. GORDON BENNETT

Caprices and Whims of Herald's Late Owner Kept Employes on Pins—Oddities of His "Don't" List

JAMES GORDON BENNETT issued The Herald for a circulation of one—himself. His eccentricities, his whims, his perversities, his kindnesses were fertile ground for anecdotes. Years ago he wrote in his little sister's book: "The man I most admire in history is Louis XI." When Bennett died, last week, he was the lessee from the French Government of the hunting lodge at Versailles built by his historic hero. And he had lived to see the whole world say after him and without question "The New York Herald! It is Bennett."

To the last Mr. Bennett measured policies and improvements by what his father had done or would have done; and it was a coincidence that he and the father he adored should have died at the same age, 77 years.

Bennett frequently quoted his father's axiom, "Make the people talk about The Herald and they'll have to buy it." Bennett made them talk and he was proud of it, but what he was most proud of was that he was the only proprietor who edited his newspaper at long range.

For years The Herald enjoyed distinction for its cable news. Yet no one in the New York office was permitted in any circumstances to send an inquiry to Paris, much less an order for news, without direct instructions from Bennett. He so jealously guarded the cable that all assignments to such duty were made by him personally.

W. R. Hearst figured prominently in the episode which at least partially affected The Herald's great prosperity. For years Bennett had reaped large profits from the "personal" advertising columns. After Hearst's papers had attacked the "personals," Bennett was indicted and had to return to this county and pay fines totaling $31,000—$25,000 for himself, $5,000 for the paper, and $1,000 for the advertising man. Then Hearst printed his picture, the artist adding the stripes of a convict and placing him behind bars. Bennett, furious, barred Hearst's name from The Herald forever, even omitting a real estate transfer record because Hearst's name was in it.

From time to time Bennett ordered names kept out, and as he never ordered them in again, the list grew long. But about two years ago he expressed great surprise to learn that there was such a list and was positive he had never ordered any names out.

When Bennett was a central figure in the gay life of Paris he, upon certain occasions, developed a violent antipathy to all things connected with the Vatican. This was the more remarkable because Bennett, following in the faith of both his father and mother, kept a pew in the Madeleine in Paris, and only adopted the Protestant Episcopal faith just before his marriage in 1914.

But on this occasion Bennett's dislike of the Vatican took active form. He sent for his secretary and dictated an editorial in which all his views were expressed with great vigor. He preceded it with an order to the editor in charge in New York to print the editorial without delay and without question. Then he went to sleep.

The next day he remembered it dimly and the secretary confirmed his worst suspicions. "My God," he is reported to have said, "they are tearing the Herald building apart stone by stone by now. I wouldn't have had that go over for a million dollars."

"I thought you wouldn't," said the secretary, feeling sure his fortune was made, "so I didn't send it."

In his relief Bennett shook hands cordially with his savior. Then nature asserted itself.

"Read me that first part again," he ordered, "that part where I told them to print it verbatim."

The secretary did so and Bennett got him a position elsewhere.

In all of Bennett's relations with his employes he kept the fact clearly before them that his wish was their only law. On one occasion he ordered a change in makeup which violated a long established rule and headed off any comment by adding: "I want it this way."

The editor replied gravely: "Mr. Bennett, if you want it we will set the Herald upside down."

Bennett replied with equal gravity—and meant it—"That is the true Herald Spirit."

During the period of The Herald's greatest prosperity it was Bennett's custom to send for men, apparently without reason and frequently without really wanting to see them. In one instance Bennett ordered a man to wait for him at Nice, and kept him there nearly three months before communicating with him. Finally, at 6 o'clock one morning, the private secretary 'phoned that Mr. Bennett wanted the man to board his yacht immediately. There was no time for breakfast, and on reporting for duty Bennett announced that he was taking a party to Egypt and would talk business later.

About 2 P. M. luncheon was served, much to the hungry Herald man's delight. But the first course was an eggshell cup of bouillon, very fine bouillon, indeed, but not filling. After what seemed an interminable wait a dish of eggs appeared.

"They weren't even man's-sized eggs," complained the man afterward, in telling of his troubles. "They were about the size of large marbles."

The man got all he could on one spoon and fell to. Still his hunger was unabated. Bennett, from the head of the table, suavely said:

"Mr. C., you seem to like those eggs. Pray let me give you some more."

This time the visitor used the spoon twice. After he had finished he noticed that the guest on his right was watching him curiously.

"Most remarkable eggs," this guest ventured.

"Oh, I don't know," replied C., with feeling. "It seems to me that as eating eggs they are a failure."

"I am sure you do not understand," suggested the guest. "These eggs come 2,000 miles down the Amazon River. The supply is very limited, and all that are brought to Europe are divided equally between Mr. Gordon Bennett and Count Herbert Bismarck. I believe these eggs cost in the neighborhood of $400 a dozen."

Poor C., to whom a corned-beef sandwich would have been much more welcome, tried to hide his feelings. Bennett didn't talk any business with him, and the next day sent him back home and fired him.

At another time Bennett summoned a staff man to Paris, and that night Bennett showed him the town in person. As the night wore on Bennett became much annoyed at a large roll of notes in his pocket, which frequently got in his way. When he finally got home his guest led him into the sitting room, where an open fire was burning. Once more the roll of notes got in Bennett's way, but this time he promptly threw them into the fire, sank into a chair, and went to sleep. His guest rescued the bank roll, and later in the morning, when Bennett woke, restored the money with an explanation.

"Did I throw that in the fire?" asked Bennett, who was still in the same room. "Well, then, I must have wanted it there," and he threw the money back into the flames. An hour later the man was on his way to New York, no longer on The Herald staff.

But Bennett could be kind. He once called to Paris a man who had given him much satisfaction by the manner in which he handled the early news of the war. Bennett became much interested in him, told him what to see in Paris, where to eat, and what to pay for his food. During the conversation Bennett found that the man had a mother in England whom he had not seen for years. He ordered him to go to her at once and then return to Paris. When he got back he ordered him to Switzerland to write on Winter sports.

The Herald building, copied from the Town Hall of Verona, Italy, had been standing four years before Bennett came from France to see it. But on his way uptown from the pier he stopped for luncheon at the Union Club, then at Twenty-first Street and Fifth Avenue. The chops he ordered did not suit him and a row with the waiter and then with the steward followed. Thoroughly angered, Bennett telephoned to a steamship line, found a ship was leaving within the hour, hired the Captain's cabin, rounded up his valet, and was off to sea without having seen the Herald building.

On the occasion of Bennett's first visit here after The Herald had bought from Dr. Cook the story of his finding of the north pole he told how the doctor got a reward far beyond his expectations. Cook had, on reaching civilization, wired Bennett offering the story for $2,500. The message was handed to Bennett just as he was taking a train for the Riviera. He glanced hastily at it and then put it in his pocket. Turning to his secretary he said: "Wire Cook The Herald will pay $25,000 for the story." Cook got that amount.

Bennett impressed his personality, or at least his whims, even upon the phraseology of his newspapers. The Herald's "don't list," by reason of its formidable length, is a byword among newspapermen. In so far as it is based on the use of good English, good taste, and common sense, it does not differ from other pamphlets of that kind, in offices where such obsolescent textbooks persist; but in its departure from them it is an expression of Bennett's verbal likes and dislikes.

A headline of five words which appeared in another New York newspaper not so long ago aroused comment in The Herald office because it violated four Herald "don'ts." It read:

"Banker Morgan Sails on Liner."

The Herald style book terms "banker," as thus used, "a name handle," and forbids it. Modern transatlantic vessels do not sail, and the verb is forbidden in The Herald except for sailing vessels or their passengers. The word "on" is forbidden in this connection—Mr. Morgan was "on board" or "aboard." And in The Herald there is no such useful word as "liner." The head, edited according to Herald rules, would read, "Mr. Morgan, a banker, left on board a steamship."

An automobile in The Herald cannot be called an auto, a car, or a machine. A railway engineer is an "engine driver." An airplane is not a plane, nor a telephone a phone. "Plan", may not be used as a verb or in any other way except as designating architectural or engineering drawings or in connection with military campaigns. A record is never broken, so the rule goes, but a new record may be set.

Bennett gravely directed that his reporters should not write about "pants," "vests" nor "full dress suits." Many of his "dont's" grew out of social terms. He forbade the use of "clubman" and of "visit." His reporters were not permitted to write of "box parties" at theatres, nor "invited guests," nor "dinner dances," nor "maids of honor," nor hotel "patron," nor "society men." "Social leader" and "society girl" were taboo.

In Bennett's lexicon there was no such word as "diplomat." It was diplomatist. A preacher of the Gospel was not, and presumably still is not, for The Herald a "minister." That word is reserved for "diplomatists."

Bennett's fondness for dogs and sport manifested itself in these rules: "'Hunting dogs' must be avoided; use 'hounds.' In an objectionable case the dogs were English setters. Use the 'g' in Pekingese."

"Say 'hunting' when referring to the chase of game on horseback, and 'shooting' when the sportsman is afoot."

One can be a member of a club or a church, according to Bennett's rule, but not a member of a crew. He held that the crew of a steamship should not be called sailors, but seamen. His predilection for the sea and for yachting caused him to list a set of nautical rules separately in his style book, for fear his men would write like landlubbers. They were cautioned not to use "prow" for "bow," "wheel" for "screw," nor "waves" for "seas." "Waves," the style book explains, "are surface undulations; seas do damage."

There are nearly thirty of these nautical rules. "Do not use 'took up the anchor,'" says one; "use 'weighed anchor.'" In the same way "took in cargo" is forbidden in favor of "stowed cargo."

To enforce these rules Bennett had a system of fines and suspensions.

With the death of Bennett The Herald staff is wondering what fate is in store for them. For twenty years and more Bennett has had practically no intercourse with his relatives, his sister, Mrs. Isaac Bell; his nephew, Isaac Bell, Jr., and his nieces, the Countess d'Armon and Mrs. Ricardo. His nephew has never been inside The Herald building. Since Bennett's marriage in 1914 to the Baroness de Reuter it has been generally understood that she would inherit The Herald.

Two years ago she visited The Herald Building one Sunday afternoon at an hour when most of the staff was absent. Mrs. Bennett wanted to see the whole building, and did. But the only comment she made was in reference to the large number of vacant desks. She professed to be unable to understand why they should be vacant, and especially why there should be so many of them.

"I don't see," she finally said, "why one desk wouldn't do for two or three men. They certainly could use it one at a time. I think there is a great deal of waste here."

MOTOR INSURANCE SHOWS BIG LOSSES

Over $116,000,000 Estimated Loss Due to Autos in 1917—Many Agencies Engaged in Safety Campaign

If any additional argument were needed to the many strong examples which have been presented in the interest of automobile safety, both to users of the highways and owners of motor cars, it might be found in the perusal of some startling insurance figures showing the enormous wastage in life and property as represented in dollars during the year 1917. These figures have been carefully compiled by the automobile department of the Aetna Life Insurance Company, one of the largest companies accepting automobile risks, and embody, in a very complete manner, the total losses for the year of all the leading companies and agencies in the United States. They show that of the 5,000,000 cars estimated in use in this country at the close of 1917, the cars insured for personal liability—that is, for accidents, fatal or otherwise—numbered about 800,000, or one car for every six in use. The financial losses may be tabulated as follows:

Personal injury, insured cars	$14,000,000
Personal injury, estimated, uninsured	50,000,000
Property loss, collision, insured cars	5,200,000
Property loss, uninsured	20,000,000
Fire and theft, insured cars	13,700,000
Fire and theft, uninsured	13,700,000
Total, insured and uninsured	$116,600,000

The total losses for these three items, compiling the bulk of the automobile risks, paid to owners of insured cars is $82,900,000, leaving an estimated loss to the owners of uninsured cars or those injured in accidents of $83,700,000.

The insurance underwriters showed early in the year, when the rates for all classes of automobile insurance were raised very materially, that the losses were assuming such dangerous proportions as to make it absolutely necessary to charge higher rates. The average increase throughout the country is placed at about 30 per cent., although the proportion of losses is said to have increased fully 55 per cent. over the preceding year or two. In some parts of the country, especially in some Western cities, where the theft loss was very severe, the increase was much more than 30 per cent.

These figures, if they mean anything, show that automobile accidents are altogether too numerous and they are an argument for the nation-wide Safety First campaign in motor-car use which is being conducted by many interests closely affiliated with the automobile industry. Conservation of life and property as well as co-operation in every effort to win the war has been brought home more clearly to the American public within the last year than ever before.

Motor-car makers are urging the conservation of gasoline and lubricants; tire manufacturers are giving advice toward getting the greatest possible mileage from tires, and under the auspices of one of the large companies a moving-picture film, entitled "Careless America," is being exhibited in all the cities of the land revealing, in a pictorial manner, object lessons of safety in the use of the highways and proper methods of driving, so as to save tire and other losses. The insurance companies are also taking an active part in the campaign both to reduce losses and to contribute to human safety.

There has never been so great a need for a vigorous Safety First automobile campaign as at the present time. Although it has been convincingly shown in many localities that the proportion of severe personal accidents in proportion to the number of cars in use has decreased in recent years, the numerical number of accidents continues to increase.

Dr. John A. Harriss, Deputy Commissioner in charge of traffic, at a recent meeting of the Highway Association of the State of New York, mentioned, in a tabulation of accidents in the streets of New York City for the first three months of this year, that there had been 109 fatal accidents and 403 serious accidents. Accidents by passenger motor cars numbered 192, those by motor trucks 84. Horse-drawn vehicles were responsible for 55, and street cars for 10.

AUTO TRADE NOTES.

Traveling over the same route it followed seven years ago on its intercity test trip, a Pierce-Arrow truck, which since has been in daily service, will repeat the performance on Tuesday, May 28, the anniversary of the trip, when it will run from New York to Boston. The event has been arranged by George M. Graham, assistant commercial manager of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company. It is his aim to dramatize the importance of intercity truck transportation in solving the problem of railroad freight congestion.

The Sanford Motor Truck Company, Syracuse, N. Y.; United Motors Company, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Ward Motor Vehicle Company, Mount Vernon, N. Y., and Standard Motor Truck Company, Detroit, Mich., have been elected to membership in the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

Six Oakland "Sensible Six" cars are being used by the Automobile Blue Book Publishing Company to gather road information in all parts of the country.

The Columbia Motors Company has adopted the name "Gem of the Highway" for its Columbia Six.

The Kaufmann-Morris Company, Inc., dealer for the Nash passenger cars and trucks, has turned the fourth floor of its building at Fifty-seventh Street and Broadway into a showroom for Nash trucks. Various types of bodies which may be fitted to the Nash models also are shown.

Despite the fact that automobile tires have recently been increased 10 per cent. in price because of war conditions, the United States Tire Company points out that these wartime prices are substantially less than tire users paid eight or nine years ago for tires much inferior to those of today.

The shipping records of Franklin cars to dealers in twenty-three cities from Sept. 1, 1917, to April 25, 1918, show that an average of 30% per cent. have been sedans. In five cities in Ohio practically one-third of the business of Franklin dealers has been in sedans.

A Maxwell truck operated by a Jersey City provision company averages eighty miles a day, making no less than 110 stops, with four gallons of gasoline.

A pictorial booklet entitled "Puzzledmuch Meets Sellemfast" has been issued by the International Motor Company, illustrating by interesting cartoons the value of the Mack truck and its construction.

As a matter of economy, every man who drives a car, according to George Stowe, President of the Mitchell Motor Car Company of New York, should familiarize himself with at least the simpler rules of automobile maintenance. The best way to do this is to get on speaking terms with the instruction book supplied with each car.

The touring sedan is not only a big success, but has come to stay, is the opinion of Harry J. De Bear, manager of the New York Maxwell branch. It is one of the coolest types of cars for midsummer driving and one of the warmest types for Winter, he adds, being converted from an open car into a closed model in a very few minutes by simply raising the windows.

Oldsmobile cars are in use by the Naval Training Stations at San Francisco, Hampton Roads, and Minneapolis, the Naval Operating Base at Norfolk, the Superintending Constructor of Aircraft, U. S. N., at Buffalo; the Naval Air Station at Hampton Roads, and the Naval Radio Station at Porto Rico.

With the co-operation of Police Commissioner Enright, Secretary of State Hugo, Magistrate House, and other officials, one hundred copies of the film "Careless America" will be shown in the moving picture theatres of New York. The film is an object lesson for greater safety from motor accidents.

Fifty Duplex trucks have been shipped from Lansing, Mich., since Jan. 1 to Portland to be used on wheat ranches throughout Oregon and Washington, and additional trucks are leaving for the West every week.

TAKE PRIDE IN NEAT CAR.

It Reflects Owner's Sense of Care—Proper Cleaning Methods.

A well-polished and clean car invariably reflects something of the owner's personality in respect to care and neatness. The best medium for washing a car is good automobile soap, dissolved in a pail of water. A service manager advises the use of a soft carriage sponge and flowing clear water in a gentle stream a few inches from the end of the hose over the wheels, chassis, and fenders. This will remove most of the mud and dust. Then cut the oily and greasy dirt with the soap solution, sopping it on freely. Go over the parts again with clear water, and let them dry.

The dust should be flowed off the body with the hose, but no water should be put on the hood. Go over the body again with the hose and a wet sponge. Squeeze the sponge dry and take up the surplus water in crevices. Then wet a chamois, wring it, and wipe the body dry. Clean the hood by hand, using a little soap solution locally if there is any machine or road oil on it.

Mud should never be permitted to dry on the car. Cold water should not be flowed on the hood while it is hot. The excessive use of soap and using water with too much force are injurious. Hot water will take the lustre from the finish.

Observe Tire's Sense of Direction.

Tires develop little moods that are almost human, is the opinion of a tire company manager, and he explains by saying that when a tire has been on a wheel for some time the rubber adjusts itself to its position, that is, the rubber shapes itself to run in one direction. It stretches in one direction, it strains in one direction, it recedes before a blow in one direction. Therefore when a motorist removes a tire for repairs or for any other purpose he should observe the tire's "sense of direction."

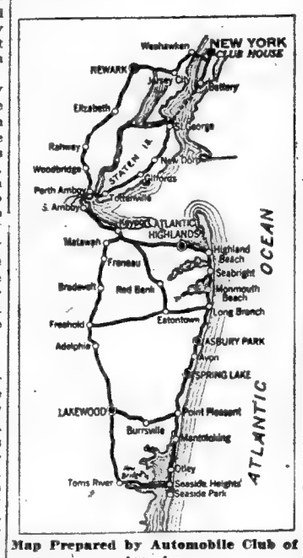
The suggestion is made that, after removal, the tire be marked with an arrow indicating the direction it has been running, so that the tire may be adjusted to run in the right direction.

English Motor Trucks Use Coal Gas.

Coal gas for fuel, carried in large rubber gas bags, is being used by 4,500 motor trucks in England. So great has been the demand for gas containers that a short time ago over 2,500 trucks had been unable to get their equipment. Only 4 per cent. of the deliveries of gas apparatus has been for private car use. The British Government recently appointed a gas traction committee to consider what further rules are necessary with regard to gas as a fuel and to make recommendations for the use of gas and flexible containers at atmospheric pressure and also to indicate the limits of approved use under limited pressure in semi-rigid containers.

JERSEY TOUR FOR WEEK END

Week-end touring at this season of the year presents many charming possibilities for healthful and scenic enjoyment in many localities just outside of New York. New Jersey is always an attractive touring ground for the motorist and a pleasant week-end run, taking in the coast resorts from Atlantic Highlands through Seabright, Asbury Park, Point Pleasant, to Toms River, with the return journey inland via Lakewood, has been mapped out by the Touring Bureau of the Automobile Club of America.



Map Prepared by Automobile Club of America.

The run from New York may be made by way of the Forty-second Street Ferry to Weehawken. Crossing on Third Street to the Hudson County Boulevard a left turn is made and the boulevard followed for about five miles, then turning to the right into a small park, winding around a monument and coming out on the Plank Road a short distance beyond and continue to Market Street, Newark. To avoid congestion and get a better percentage of good road surface, it is preferable to turn left from Market Street into Ferry Street. About half a mile beyond turn left into Polk Street, which is one block long, turning right into Lafayette Street and follow to Broad Street. Turn left and run to Lincoln Park, where a right turn is made into Clinton Avenue.

Both Frelinghuysen and Elizabeth Avenues can be followed to Elizabeth, which offer about the same road surface. If Frelinghuysen Avenue is followed, turn left into Astor Place. Two blocks beyond a left turn can be made into Elizabeth Avenue. On reaching Elizabeth turn right at the Post Office; run three blocks and turn left into Cherry Street which becomes St. George's Avenue, and follow through Rahway and Woodbridge to Perth Amboy, where the Raritan River is crossed over a long bridge and the route continued through South Amboy, rather rough until the outskirts of the town are reached, where a new brick road will be found to Keyport.

Beyond Keyport the route rises over the Atlantic Highlands and the Navesink Heights and follows the Atlantic Highlands Boulevard south through Seabright to Long Branch and along the coast via Allenhurst, Asbury Park, Spring Lake, and Point Pleasant to Seaside Heights, where a right turn is made crossing a long toll bridge to Tom's River, about one hundred miles from New York. If the motorist desires to extend the tour to Atlantic City, a left turn can be made and the trunk line followed to Atlantic City.

The return journey can be somewhat shortened by following the direct trunk line through Lakewood and Freehold to Keyport, then through South Amboy to Perth Amboy, crossing the ferry to Tottenville and following the Amboy Road across Staten Island to St. George, taking the Municipal Ferries to the Battery—eighty miles from Toms River, making a total of 180 miles for the week-end trip.

Motor Law Book Ready.

The 1918 motor vehicle laws of New York State in booklet form will be ready for distribution by Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State, within a few days. Copies may be had on request at Albany or at the automobile bureaus in New York City, Buffalo, and elsewhere.

In addition to containing the recent amendments to the motor vehicle law enacted at the last Legislature, including the new headlight law, the booklet will furnish the periods of motoring reciprocity between this and other States.

Want Cars for Orphans' Day.

Plans are nearing completion for the fourteenth annual orphans' automobile day outing on Thursday, June 6. Although there have been many offers of cars and trucks there is still a shortage, but it is hoped that enough owners will provide transportation for about 5,000 children to Donnelly's Grove, College Point. Children from thirty institutions will be taken. Send the offer of your car to make some orphans happy to the Secretary, 1,777 Broadway, telephone Columbus 8400.

BIG FUTURE FOR TRUCKS.

Opening of the Barge Canal Will Increase Motor Transportation.

A talk on the barge canal, with special reference to the opportunities which the canal opens for motor truck transportation in the most populous sections of New York State, will be made by Laurence H. Hart of Buffalo, one of the canal engineers, before the members of the Motor Truck Club of America next Wednesday evening. The meeting will be held at the Automobile Club of America. Mr. Hart will show a number of stereopticon pictures of the canal and its construction.

It has been estimated that 78 per cent. of the population of the State is within ten miles of the new canal system and 87 per cent. within twenty miles. With the increased used of the canal, motor trucks will naturally be the carriers of goods to inland localities.

The canal has been taken over by the Government and freight shipments will be regulated according to their essential values and facilities for shipment. Canal rates will be the same as rail for the present. Telephone service will permit shippers to trace the progress of their goods at frequent intervals if desired.

TIRES TO BE MADE IN STANDARD SIZES

Common Sense System Adopted by Rubber Industry as War Measure—Many Styles to be Abandoned

An important step toward standardizing tire sizes has been made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce and the War Service Committee of the rubber industry. The action follows the recommendation of the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defense.

The plan will reduce the number of sizes and styles of tires from approximately 200 to 28, thus conserving manufacturing facilities, reducing capital invested in raw materials and finished product, and giving better service to automobile owners by eliminating a majority of the sizes and styles now required. The schedule calls for seven sizes of rims and nine sizes of pneumatic tires, adequate to equip any motor vehicle up to a two-ton truck.

The tire men, at a conference with the National Chamber Directors, outlined the advantages of standardization in such a way that prompt approval was given to the plan, the adoption of which will be recommended to all automobile manufacturers.

Manufacturers of passenger automobiles will be asked to fit their future production with one of the following sizes of rims: 30 by 3½, 32 by 3½, 33 by 4, and 34 by 4½. These are to take tires of those sizes, with the following respectively as over-sizes: 31 by 4, 33 by 4, 34 by 4½, and 35 by 5. For trucks there will be three standard sizes of pneumatics: 36 by 6, 38 by 7, and 40 by 8. The two sizes that fit the smallest rims are designed to be of clincher type; all others will be of straight-side type. Both plain and non-skid types will be retained.

In classifying sizes for present or future elimination from manufacturing schedules those to be dropped at once contain only tires which sales records of the principal companies show are no longer in demand.

The next class includes those sizes which have not been furnished as equipment for a long time. They are practically obsolete, though sales records still show a slight trace of demand. To take care of this demand during the coming Summer, after which it is calculated these cars will practically cease to be a factor in the market, November has been set as a date for discontinuing such odd sizes.

A still larger group of sizes no longer furnished as standard equipment with any car, but still in service among many cars now running, is recognized in another classification. It is felt that in setting a date in November, 1919, to drop these sizes, ample allowance will be made for cars which use them to outlive their usefulness.

The recommendations of the committee mean that after the needs of all cars running have been satisfactorily served and automobile makers have brought their own production into line to conform with the new recommendations, pneumatic tires will be made in but six sizes for passenger cars and three for trucks, with four sizes of rims for passenger cars and three for trucks, instead of the present indefinite number listed by the various manufacturers.

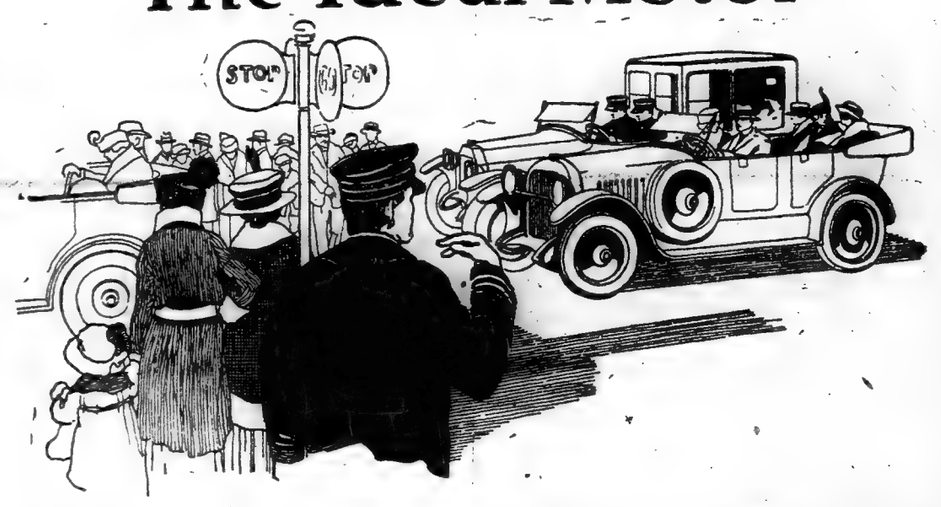
Apply for Headlight Tests.

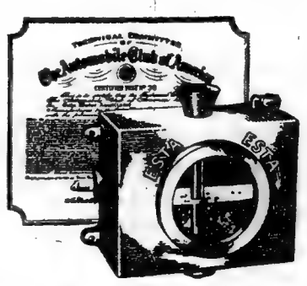
Over a dozen manufacturers of headlight devices have submitted their product to Secretary of State Hugo as the first step toward a compliance with the new headlight law. Five of the concerns are in this State, one in Massachusetts, and one in Ohio. As soon as the technical reports of the tests are received a list of such lights and devices as comply with the law will be issued. Additions must necessarily be made to the list from time to time.

The Ideal Motor



THE Ideal Motor ought to run at full efficiency month in and month out. Yours would—if it were not for the ever incurring plague of carbon. Why go on having it cleaned out every month or so—and worse than that having a sick half-efficient motor the greater part of the time? The Esta Water Auxiliator will clean a fouled motor and will keep it clean. It gives you a motor full of life and energy—a motor that jumps when you touch the accelerator; that climbs with eagerness; that throttles down to a walk in high gear.

The Esta Water Auxiliator kills carbon at its source, at the point of formation. It is a handsome, polished tank, easily installed under the hood on the back of the dash of any car, truck, tractor, yacht or stationary engine. It is a carbon preventor—not a temporary remedy. It becomes a real, integral part of the motor for all time.



The Esta Water Auxiliator is the only device of its kind in the world. It is fully protected and patented under date of January 11, 1916, and under date of September 25, 1917. Additional patents are now pending.

PRICE $15.00.

ESTA
WATER AUXILIATOR

Don't take our word for it—here is the proof:

The Automobile Club of America

"With an Esta attached to a carbonized motor at the end of the decarbonizing run there was obtained in one hour's time an increase in speed of 35.7 per cent. and of power 35.6 per cent.; also a decrease in fuel consumption of 17.2 per cent."

Pratt Institute of Brooklyn

"At the end of test there was shown an average decrease in fuel consumption of 25.5 per cent. and an average increase of 27.5 per cent. in speed.

"The result of these tests would indicate the following points in favor of the Esta Water Auxiliator:

1. Decreased fuel consumption.
2. Increased speed.
3. Increased power.
4. Smoother operation.
5. More nearly perfect combustion.
6. No carbon deposited."

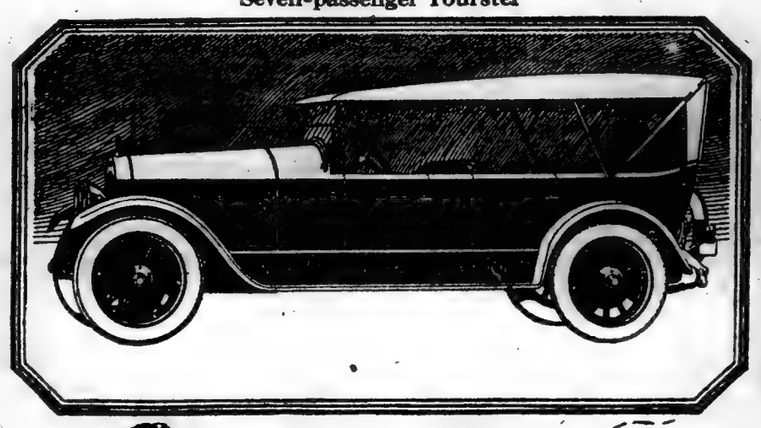
The Cole Aero-Eight

Seven-passenger Tourster



EVERY road is a boulevard when you ride in the Cole Aero-Eight.

It is not simply a composite of chassis, power plant and body—

It is a new type of mechanism—scientifically designed and equipped with every advanced feature of improved eight-cylinder construction.

It defies description. Its performance, alone, justifies the effort taken to produce it.

THE limit of Aero-Eight capacity seems unattainable. There is always a reserve for the emergency. Its inexhaustible energy is created by adapting to its construction the latest advancements in improved aerotype engineering as conceived for the great war machines.

CREEL AS A RECURRENT STORM CENTRE

How Government's Publicity Man Has Shown Himself an Adept at Getting Into Hot Water With Congress and the Public.

MR. CREEL has done it again—Mr. Creel has talked some more, and Congress is angry, despite his apology. It has happened so many times that one begins to speculate whether official ruin can be permanently dodged by this young man who "puts his foot into it" oftener than any one else in the war-troubled Administration.

The story of Creel begins a little over a year ago, when the Espionage bill—so drawn as surreptitiously to create a press censorship—had not reached a vote. Secretaries Lansing, Baker, and Daniels then addressed a letter to President Wilson in which they said:

"There is a steadily developing need for some authoritative agency to assure the publication of all the vital facts of national defense.

"America's great present needs are confidence, enthusiasm, and service, and these needs will not be met completely unless every citizen is given the feeling of partnership that comes with full, frank statements concerning the conduct of the public business.

"It is our opinion that the two functions—censorship and publicity—can be joined in honesty and with profit, and we recommend the creation of a committee of public information. The Chairman should be a civilian, probably some writer of proved courage, ability and vision, able to gain the understanding and co-operation of the press, and at the same time rally the authors of the country to a work of service."

These were the specifications for the job and for the man that should fill it.

The President created the Committee on Public Information, and appointed George Creel its Chairman. The remainder of the committee is made up of three members of the President's Cabinet—the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy.

George Creel had been a radical writer, an editor of The Rocky Mountain News, to whose columns he contributed editorials savagely denouncing the United States Government. He had been Commissioner of Public Safety in Denver, but was removed under charges after a month in office. Whatever may have been the rights or the wrongs of his controversies, his career had been one of turbulence and mud-spattering; he had denounced and been denounced. His name stood for acrimonious contention.

Before the Espionage bill was finally passed by Congress, anything authorizing a censorship of the press was stricken from it.

Even the censorship of official matter to be issued to the press, after a shifting seat of authority, has finally settled in the departments themselves. Thus, though the Secretaries of State, War and Navy are members of the Committee on Public Information, each of them has appointed a censor for his respective department, who is the sole source of information.

So far as his legal authority goes, Creel is a censor without anything to censor. There have, however, been some remarkable efforts at censorship.

Last July the newspapers were amazed to discover that, without notice to them, the cable companies had been instructed to divert press dispatches from France to the War Department at Washington for censoring. After examination by the Committee on Public Information, the cable companies were permitted to deliver these dispatches to the newspapers.

It is doubtful if any official order had ever succeeded in raising such a thunderous storm of disapproval on such short notice. The disapproval seemed to be unanimous. The newspapers denounced this invasion of their news service as an unwarranted usurpation of power. It was vigorously resented by Senators and Representatives, who asserted that, in view of the refusal of Congress to authorize a censorship of the press, such an act was a point-blank assertion that the formally expressed will of Congress was of no consequence and that the clause of the Constitution guaranteeing the freedom of the press was a dead letter.

On the morning following the sudden establishment of this extra-legal censorship, it was announced that it would be continued "pending the complete organization of General Pershing's headquarters in France and the arrival there of the correspondents accredited to American newspapers." But on the evening of the same day announcement was made that it had been abandoned.

And now Colonel Theodore Roosevelt charges that a new form of censorship has been brought to light. He said in his recent statement:

"During the last year the Administration has shown itself anxious to punish the newspapers which upheld the war, but which told the truth about the Administration's failure to conduct the war efficiently; whereas it has failed to proceed against various powerful newspapers which opposed the war or attacked our allies or directly or indirectly aided Germany against this country, as those papers upheld the Administration and defended the inefficiency."

Postmaster General Burleson immediately issued a public statement in which he challenged Colonel Roosevelt to give the evidence on which he based his charge, summing the situation up very succinctly in this rhetorical flourish: "If true, I am utterly unworthy of trust and should be scourged from office in disgrace."

The Colonel has given some of his evidence; he promises that there is more which he will submit in a letter to "some Senator." The victims of unfair discrimination cited by the Colonel were the Metropolitan Magazine, Collier's Weekly, and The New York Tribune. On the other hand, he maintained that "prime example of failure by the Administration to proceed against really hostile and damaging utterance" to the nation's war aims, but not to the Administration, was afforded by "a failure of the Administration to deal with Mr. Hearst's papers as it has dealt with certain other papers."

It should be recalled, though no emphasis should be put upon it, since the evidence thus far is evenly balanced, that Merrill Rogers, business manager of Max Eastman's paper, The Masses, testified at the trial of those responsible for its publication that he had submitted to the Chairman of the Committee on Public Information the June issue, which contained the full-page "I Will Not Kill" advertisement, and that Creel O. K.'d it. Creel went on the stand, and though he admitted that the publication had been submitted to him by Rogers, flatly denied that he had given it his approval.

The publicity work done under Mr. Creel's direction was outlined in a letter written by him to President Wilson last February. The following summary of the activities of the Committee on Public Information is taken from the War Cyclopedia, a Government publication:

1. A division of news which supervises and distributes news "releases" from the civil and military departments.
2. A daily official bulletin.
3. A division of civic and educational co-operation which prepares and circulates the Red, White and Blue and the war information pamphlets.
4. Four-minute men who speak in moving picture theatres.
5. Public speaking in which the more extensive speaking campaigns are co-ordinated.
6. Syndicate features.
7. A division of films.
8. A division of pictures.
9. A division of foreign-language papers.
10. A division of distribution.
11. Woman's war work.
12. Division of reference.
13. Art.
14. Advertising.
15. Foreign educational work.
16. Business management.

In his letter to the President, Mr. Creel said: "The Committee on Public Information has grown to be a world-organization. Not only does it touch every part of the great machinery that co-ordinates the forces of America for victory, but it carries the meanings and purposes of America to all peoples, making the fight for public opinion in every country."

When the work of the committee was under fire last December in the House of Representatives, Creel sent a report to the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, which stated that, in the seven months covered by the report—from May 4 to Nov. 30—$300,067 was expended out of the allotment of $350,000 for general purposes and $1,285,500 for "informational work in allied, neutral, and enemy countries." The report did not give a list of the salaries paid nor make any attempt to itemize the expenditures of the various divisions represented in the Committee's activities.

There have been various efforts—all abortive—to let the light of inquiry into the far-flung activities of this committee. It has been asserted by Congressmen and others that the committee is in reality only an artfully contrived press agency for the Administration. But this has not been demonstrated.

Last month, when America was on the tip-toe of anxiety to get the latest news as to how the British were withstanding that smashing blow of the Huns, when Haig had issued the call to his sorely-tried men to "stand with their backs to the wall," when most Americans were grieving that this nation was not prepared to take its due part in the struggle, George Creel, addressing a convention at Washington, held for the purpose of acquainting public speakers with the facts about the war so that they might be better equipped to inform the American people, remarked:

"There was a question, when we went to war, of preparation. We had not prepared, and I shall always be proud to my dying day, that there was no rush of preparation in this country prior to the day the President went before Congress and said: 'We are driven to accept a state of war by the aggressions of the German Government.' For, to have prepared, to have held out offers of peace with one hand and attempted a conciliation with the other, and all the while have been preparing for war, would have been to give the lie to what we said, namely, that we would not engage in war unless we had exhausted every resource at our command."

This statement, possibly, may be regarded as an attempt to argue that the failure to make preparations for war was based on the moral ground that it would have been wrong to undertake war preparations while diplomatic efforts were in progress to preserve peace. From an academic standpoint it is undoubtedly a better excuse than the one offered by various pacifists that "the war is 3,000 miles away."

Expressions of indignation were heard from all sides. Men in Congress demanded the removal of Creel from office. Creel protested that he had been misquoted. It was said that "unfortunately for Mr. Creel, no stenographer was present." But it so happened that there was a stenographer present—Rexford L. Holmes—and the above sentences were taken from his stenographic transcript.

In the same speech Mr. Creel, after a passing reference to "much ado over the fact that a few overcoats were lacking," said that "not a life had been lost by negligence." This assertion has been contrasted with the reference to the lack of overcoats in the dead of Winter, made by the Surgeon General of the army, in official reports concerning pneumonia and other diseases in the National Guard camps. It was also brought out by the testimony of the Surgeon General and others that, through lack of tents, soldiers were crowded in a way that would cause the spread of disease. Testimony was also given that hospitals at camps and cantonments were inadequate, some of them not completed, and some without heating apparatus in Winter.

Mr. Creel also said that if it had been thought imperative the Government could have put a rifle in the hands of every soldier in the camps when we went to war. This was in sharp contrast to the testimony brought out before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs as to the inadequacy of small arms.

Less than a fortnight previous the same attitude toward facts and propaganda had been displayed by Mr. Creel's Committee on Public Information. Senator Wadsworth called the attention of the Senate Military Affairs Committee to the fact that the Committee on Public Information had issued a picture for distribution to the newspapers, bearing a caption which made it appear that the Government had shipped hundreds of war aircraft to its forces in France. It was brought out that only one machine had actually been shipped over. The director of the Division of Pictures of Creel's bureau was summoned before the Senate committee. On cross-examination he admitted that the caption was misleading. Telegrams had been sent out to the newspapers, he said, not to use the descriptive lines that had been objected to. This had been done, he explained, after Senator Wadsworth had called the Committee on Public Information up on the telephone and inquired about the matter.

A few days later, however, when Creel's Official Bulletin appeared, it contained this statement: "Though hundreds of aircraft have been shipped, our factories have reached quantity production and thousands upon thousands will follow."

"As an appropriate announcement on the eve of the Fourth of July," the Secretary of the Navy gave out a thrilling story of a successful encounter between our transports and enemy submarines. On the following morning the nation rejoiced to read in the newspapers of this splendid first brush with the enemy. There had been two attacks. The first attack was of "disturbing significance," as our ships were set upon "at a point well this side of the rendezvous" where they were to meet ships of war dispatched to meet them from a transatlantic station.

"The attack," so ran the story, "was made in force, although the night made impossible any exact counting of the U-boats for what they deemed a slaughter." The high seas convoy answered with heavy gun fire and "its accuracy stands proved by the fact that the torpedo discharge became increasingly scattered and inaccurate. It is not known how many torpedoes were launched, but five were counted as they sped by bow and stern."

The official story handed out by the Secretary of the Navy, concluded with an equally circumstantial account of the second attack directed "against another contingent," in which not only "did the destroyers hold the U-boats at a safe distance, but their speed also resulted in the sinking of one U-boat at least."

But a blight was cast on the nation's rejoicing by whisperings of doubt, among those who ought to know, as to the accuracy of Mr. Daniels's story of the sea encounters. Gradually the truth came out. The story was a highly embellished enlargement of a brief report from the commanding Admiral. Mr. Creel had supplied all the local color. He was also responsible for the "sinking of one U-boat at least."

Another thrilling story of naval combat was printed in the afternoon papers of Sept. 10 last. It was to the effect that the steamer Westwego, with several other ships, on Sept. 5, had beaten off an attack of six submarines near the French coast, with the result that two of the steamships were sunk and "probably all of the sumarines lost." This story also had been given out by the Creel news bureau, and it, too, shrank amazingly. The true story was that one submarine was supposed to have been lost. The explanation given was that there had been a "serious error made in transcribing the report of the attack," and that the erroneous report had inadvertently been issued to the press.

In another naval story containing much thrilling detail given out by the Committee on Public Information on Oct. 6, another enemy submarine was inferentially sunk by Mr. Creel.

Mr. Creel's committee is spending large sums of money for the publication of pamphlets and other "literature." "War Message and Facts Behind It" is one of his publications. Of it, Professor John H. Latané, head of the Department of History in Johns Hopkins University, said: "Here is a book so full of errors in fact and inference that it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people. It is garbled as badly as the German publications which it condemned." Of the "Red, White, and Blue Book," another Creel official publication, Professor S. H. Clark of the University of Chicago said: "It is full of generalities and little proof."

When the Administration decided to publish the von Igel revelations, they were handed over to Creel to prepare in chronological form. He drew conclusions from a telegram in which Holland was mentioned, which brought an official protest from Chevalier van Rappard, Minister from the Netherlands, to the effect that the conclusion was absolutely unwarranted by the evidence on which it was based.

These are a few of what Mr. Creel's critics term his "indiscretions." His latest—"I don't like slumming, so I won't explore the hearts of Congress for you"—is so recent that no further reference is required.

WOMEN FARM SPECIALISTS

SIX women farm-labor specialists have been appointed by the Food Commission of New York State, which will pay their salaries and expenses while they organize units of women workers. The appointments were made at the request of Charles D. Barnes, Director Bureau of Employment, State Industrial Commission, Department of Labor, New York, and will work under him.

The plan is to apportion the State into six districts taking in land that is farmed in the most intensive way.

After completing all preliminary arrangements, including the choice of a proper supervisor for the unit, the farm labor specialist goes to the largest nearby industrial community and through local organizations, such as the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Home Defense Council, and the men's and women's clubs, seeks to raise a sufficient fund to organize the unit, this amount varying according to special needs. Having provided for cots, bedding, and a general camp outfit, as well as enough money to pay the grocery bills until payment for labor begins to come in, the work is turned over to the nearest State Employment Office, where a member of the staff is assigned to select the women who are to make up the unit, which may vary in size from fifteen to twenty-five.

"We are going to co-operate with the Women's Land Army," Mr. Barnes announces, "in that we will consider for the units such women as have enrolled in the Women's Land Army, but in all cases we are going to reserve the right to decide on each individual woman helping to make up the unit. No woman under 18 will be taken. We are hoping that our farm-labor specialists may be able to establish several units of this kind, but we are going to work slowly and be very careful in the selection of women.

"In sections where the farmers are unacquainted with the work capable of being done by women on the farms, they are still skeptical, and we are going to be careful to insure the success of the units this year. We are already receiving from individual farmers with large estates requests for small units of women. The farmer in this case agrees to see to the housing of the women and engages to give them full-time work on his farm or possibly on the farm of a neighboring farmer who has gone in on the proposition with him. In a case of this kind we would send our farm-labor specialist to investigate the situation, to see if it is a proper place to send the women, and to see that they were going to receive ample wages."

CHANDLER SIX
$1595

Unusual Economy
Without Sacrifice

THE Chandler Six has always been famous for its economy of operation—economy without the sacrifice of reserve power, without the sacrifice of roadability, without the sacrifice of beauty of design.

Thousands of Chandler owners all over America tell of gasoline mileage of fifteen to seventeen miles per gallon.

Tire mileage of seven thousand to nine thousand miles per set of tires is commonplace among Chandler owners.

Chandler owners and Chandler dealers say that the service upkeep of the Chandler car is much less than that of other good cars which they have owned or sold.

In the ownership of a Chandler Six you will possess a really great automobile—great not merely from the standpoint of economy of operation and maintenance, but, even more important, from the standpoint of mechanical excellence and daily performance.

The Chandler motor, designed and built in our own factory, distinguishes the Chandler chassis, marked throughout by its simplicity and its sturdiness. The life, pick-up, get-away and endurance of this motor will astonish you quite as much as it pleases you.

Bodies of most attractive design and of unusual comfort are mounted on the Chandler chassis.

Will Your Present Car
Match The Super-Six?

Can You Rely Upon It to Serve You Through the Times Just Ahead?

Now is the time when you should arrange your motor car needs for the future.

It may shortly be impossible to get a good new car.

You have seen in the newspapers how it is proposed to curtail productions to a fraction of the present output. Even now the output of every factory is much lower than had been scheduled.

But there has been no such falling off in demand.

Present needs call for more and better cars than can be furnished.

Motor cars must do the work that the badly-pressed railroads cannot do.

Good cars only can be relied upon. With outputs curtailed and a scarcity of mechanics to keep less dependable cars in good order, it is important that you plan for your future needs now.

Get a Super-Six while you can.

We can take care of today's wants. The revised schedule, much less than we had expected, makes future supply uncertain.

The known reliability of the Super-Six makes it the first choice of thousands of buyers.

If all who plan buying Hudsons should realize the present situation, all the cars the factory can build in the next year would undoubtedly be spoken for within a few days.

Some are going to be disappointed because they won't be able to get deliveries when they want them.

Better look over your present car closely and determine if it can be relied upon with the outlook as it now is.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Continue Active, but Less Aggressive—A Sharp Spurt in Marine Issues.

The attention of the financial district was, quite naturally, held yesterday morning by the market's reflection of the news that the International Mercantile Marine Directors have about completed negotiations looking to the transfer of nearly all of the company's ships to British owners. Marine shares and bonds were the outstanding feature of the trading and easily went to new high records. The preferred stock sold up to 104⅝, and closed with a net gain of 8⅜, while the common advanced to 30⅞ at the height of the movement and closed up 1⅛. The 6 per cent. bonds, which according to the Street's understanding of the plan, will eventually be called for retirement, opened with an overnight gain of 2 points and quickly sold above par, though they later reacted more than 2 points. There was an unexplained movement in the shares of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Company which netted a gain of 4½ points and in New York Dock Company which netted 4 points.

Aside from these conspicuous exceptions the list was inclined to heaviness. Steel sold down to 109⅝, but rallied more than a point and closed practically at Friday's lowest price. In some of the recent speculative leaders there was abundant evidence that insiders have taken their profits and temporarily, at least, abandoned the issues that served them so well. Baldwin, which had sold at 101⅞ a few days earlier, was depressed to 92¾, and closed with a net loss of 1 point. Midvale also declined a point and Bethlehem Steel B ½ point. The movement among the rails was highly irregular. On one hand, Canadian Pacific, Union Pacific, Reading, and Baltimore & Ohio lost a little ground, while New Haven and the St. Paul issues were in better demand.

The slowing down in the movement in the leading shares has already done much to correct the unhealthy atmosphere created by the rapidity of the rise in the earlier part of the bull market. Conservative brokers were disturbed at the manner in which the public was disregarding all fundamental conditions to run after each new speculative favorite as it was pushed into the limelight. Under cover of strength in the last few days there has been a large amount of selling by the big speculative traders, who felt that the advance had come more rapidly than was warranted by conditions.

The record increase in surplus reserve shown in last week's bank statement was nearly matched by a decrease reported in yesterday's summary of nearly $57,000,000. There was a shrinkage of $19,295,000 in loans, with an increase in net demand deposits almost offsetting a loss in time deposits. The reduction in reserves was almost exactly the amount by which the member banks credits at the Federal Reserve Bank were lowered. Rediscounts of commercial paper at the central institution showed a decrease of $81,300,000.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Saturday Selling Absorbed.

For a Saturday's market, following a series of large advances earlier in the week, the record of prices yesterday was of a character to encourage the holders of stocks. The industrial list sold off at the start, with Steel quickly going down nearly a point, Baldwin close to 2 points, and Bethlehem B about as far as Steel. Thereafter the sales appeared to be absorbed with fair ease. These observations apply to the issues which had no especial influence to cause their movements. The Marine shares reflected in their strength the further effect of plans to dispose of the British tonnage.

Government and Steel Companies.

Intimations supplied in some Washington dispatches yesterday that the Government might assume the management of steel companies if war needs were not adequately supplied were not confirmed by steel makers who were familiar with the negotiations between their representatives and the War Industries Board. When the manufacturers consulted with J. Leonard Replogle, Director of Steel Supply, late last month, they were informed that a rigid system of priorities was being considered by the Government if sufficient mill output was not voluntarily devoted to Government work to an extent equal to the needs. As far as is known, this possibility and not direct management is what the War Industries Board is considering as an alternative.

The Odd-Lot Market.

"The public again sold on balance in the market of the last week," the Odd Lot Review says, in considering the market for fractional lots of stock. "There were 10 per cent. more sellers than buyers. Actual stock sold exceeded that bought by 25 per cent. That the public has sold on balance for the last two weeks is no indication of a change of opinion in the basic soundness of the market on the part of the small investor. A rising market catches old selling orders, whereas no old buying orders become operating."

Large Motor Company Dividend.

The Nash Motors Company, which is relatively a new participant in the automobile manufacturing field in its present form, has declared a dividend of $15 a share, payable May 31, to stock of record May 20. Good earnings are indicated by the size of the disbursement and emphasized by the fact that an initial disbursement of $6 a share was made on Feb. 1. The company was incorporated in July, 1916, and took over the business of the Thomas B. Jeffery Company.

Decline in Surplus Bank Reserves.

A decrease of $56,608,000 in surplus reserves was reported yesterday in the Clearing House bank statement. This brought the total excess reserves down to $46,200,000, which is an increase of $9,000,000, compared with the figures of a fortnight ago. The reduction of the previous week's high total for excess reserves, namely, $102,807,000, (which was built up as a result of heavy Liberty Loan payments,) was quite natural by reason of the fact that following the May 9 payments a readjustment of credits between local and out-of-town institutions had to take place. The fact that reserves of member banks held with the Federal Bank decreased by more than $55,000,000 is an indication that during the last week shiftments of funds were made to the interior. A remarkable feature of yesterday's bank statement is that, while loans decreased by about $20,000,000, there was practically no change in the general deposit account, although Government deposits declined about $10,000,000 to $514,000,000.

Reserve Bank Loses Gold.

The weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York showed a loss of $27,000,000 in gold reserves. Discounts of commercial paper and advances made to member banks decreased $81,000,000, while the bank's holdings of acceptances increased by about $4,000,000. The bank's investments in United States bonds and certificates of indebtedness were reduced by $35,000,000. Payments made on behalf of the Treasury brought about a contraction in Government deposits to the extent of $31,000,000. There are now outstanding $565,212,585 of Federal reserve notes, against which the Reserve Agent holds $247,838,530 in gold and lawful money.

The Marine Deal.

Whether because the cry of "wolf" had been heard too often, or because the definite settlement of the deal is still too far away to tempt the speculator greatly, the various International Mercantile Marine securities did not respond so noticeably to the news that that company's sale of its British properties had been practically negotiated, as some hopefuls expected. The market began to take the deal seriously, judging by the course of prices, early Friday afternoon. But yesterday morning, while both preferred and common stock issues were active and strong, the preferred registered a net gain of only 2⅜ and the common of 1⅛. The 6 per cent. bonds of the company, which will presumably be retired at 110 and interest at the completion of the transaction, sold up 4 points further, to 101¼.

How the Shipping World Takes It.

Shipping men generally regard the Marine deal as purely an after-war proposition, and on that basis are much pleased at it. "It clears the decks for some good, clean, straight business rivalry between American and British shipping after the war," said a man prominently identified with American shipping, but not connected with the I. M. M. "We are looking forward rather eagerly to competing with the British on even terms after the war, and the ownership of such a big block of British tonnage by an American firm was an anomaly we are all glad to see removed."

The Cotton Profiteer.

N. L. Carpenter & Co. have come to the rescue of the Southern cotton grower, who has been pictured as a plutocrat and profiteer, on the basis of 30-cent cotton. They quote from a North Carolina correspondent, who points out that whereas the per-acre profit on cotton last year may have looked formidable in comparison with the per-acre profit on wheat, an acre of cotton requires so much more attention and labor than an acre of wheat that it is worth more. The average cotton farm is 27 acres and the average grain farm 107 acres, and this about measures the difference between the amount of grain one man can cultivate and the amount of cotton he can care for.

Going Into Repair Yards.

A number of shipping men during the last few weeks have been simultaneously smitten with the same brilliant idea. It is this: With all the big new shipbuilding yards that the Government is pushing along, and the immense new merchant fleet that is coming out of those yards, there has not been a corresponding increase in the repair and docking facilities which will be needed to take care of that fleet. The result has been that a number of them, looking over the ground quietly with a view to setting up some repair yards, have bumped into each other at unexpected points.

THE COTTON MARKET

Final Quotations Firm, Off 1 to 11 Points, on Covering by Short Traders.

Cotton continued rather weak and wabbly on the local market yesterday, but, on the whole, showed continued indications of the stabilization of the industry on the new price level, as final quotations were firm, off from 1 to 11 points only from Friday's close. This was partly due to covering by short traders for over week-end, but inasmuch as all the talk of the session had been bearish in the extreme the small net result on the market was generally considered proof of its sound underlying position.

First prices were off from 2 to 20 points, all the active months being down, and selling still lower in the first few minutes. This made a good spot for short floor traders to cover and get away early, and enough of them took advantage of their opportunity to bring prices back several points. But they might as well have waited longer, for Liverpool cables said that the British Cotton Control Board had reduced working hours in Lancashire mills from fifty-five and a half to forty hours a week, and a little figuring on this sufficed to show holders of long cotton that their export market had been still further reduced and to persuade them to sell even more extensively here. At the same time crop reports continued favorable, and with all these factors prices went down again until they were between 30 and 40 points below Friday.

There was bargain-hunting by domestic trade representatives at this level, however, notably in October, and this, with renewed week-end covering by the big short interest, brought prices back rapidly in the last half hour.

The Lancashire cotton consumption is now scaled down, it is estimated, to about 35,000 bales a week, while the week-end figures show a world's visible supply of American cotton already 110,000 bales greater than that one year ago. However, it is known that some Southern growers are making stubborn efforts to hold part of their crop until peace, which they still believe will come soon, and bring with it a world-wide increase in demand and prices.

Yesterday's quotations follow:

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Fractional net declines were registered at the close of a dull and uninteresting market yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. The general tone of the market throughout the session was irregular. Stocks were freely supplied whenever there was any indication of a rally in the list. Prices at the close were generally higher than the low levels of the day and steadier in action. Buying interest was centred in the Marine shares.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

The Merchant's Point of View

By a series of measures the Government is gradually producing a restriction of industries without attempting to draw the impossible hard and fast line between essentials and nonessentials. At the start, everything done seemed so abrupt because interference with the ordinary ways of business was new, and certain steps had to be taken hastily, like the one shutting up factories and stores to save fuel. Subsequent orders, affecting the priority of furnishing and transporting supplies and putting a ban on certain imports and exports, caused much less resettlement. The latest of the regulations which went into effect on Wednesday last draws the lines a little tighter. Previously, things except those absolutely prohibited could be shipped if licenses to do so were granted. Hereafter, so far as the allied nations are concerned, another requisite is called for. This is the approval in writing of the representatives in this country of those nations. Nothing can otherwise be sent to Great Britain, France, Italy, or Belgium, and the agents of those countries are to see to it that nothing is approved for shipment unless it is necessary for "the essential requirements" of the respective nations.

Good Reasons for Regulation.

Back of this kind of regulation are divers considerations, each of which is important in the work of winning the war. The main thing, of course, is the saving of tonnage both on land and sea. The railway and water transportation systems of the country are bound to be overtaxed in the carriage of raw materials and food as well as finished products. Every added burden will mean delay in the making and carriage of things absolutely needed by the forces overseas and by the Allies, and may even result in privations to the people at home. Aside, too, from the needless diversion of materials for essential purposes which might result, there would also be the diversion of labor, which is none too plentiful, and which promises to be further curtailed as more men are called to the colors. There will be no incentive to increased production for export of unnecessary articles if there be no chance of shipping them out of the country. And there will, in consequence, be more concentration on the work of getting out guns and other munitions, ships to convey men and materials abroad, and the food and fuel needed by this country and by the Allies. All who do get licenses to export under the new regulations will be obliged to pledge themselves not to acquire for further shipments, or to take any steps toward producing, manufacturing, or fitting for export any articles until after obtaining the approval of the Priority Administration or the War Industries Board. This is to check production at its source. A new regulation on imports which goes into effect later in the month will work in the same direction.

Some Foreign Trade Figures.

For the present fiscal year, which ends with June, there will be a decided lowering of the so-called balance of trade in favor of this country. Thus far the figures are available only for the nine months ended with March. These show imports of $2,063,530,107 as compared with $1,818,069,116 for the period in 1917, and of exports amounting to $4,393,526,745 as compared with $4,636,979,245 in the nine months last year. The imports increased by $265,460,991 and the exports decreased by $243,452,500. The excess of exports over imports in the nine months was $2,309,996,638 as compared with $2,818,910,129 in the similar period of 1917, a discrepancy of over half a billion dollars. This decrease is even larger than it seems when the higher prices of commodities this year are taken into account. Among the imports the great drop is in those from Europe, which amounts to about $133,500,000. Russia being the only country to show an increase. A slight decrease in imports is shown from Africa. On the other hand, increases in imports are shown from North and South America, Asia, and Oceania. On the exports side, Europe alone among the grand divisions decreased its quota, all the others taking more of American products. Among European countries only Italy and Belgium took more of them in the nine months this year than last. The exports to Japan keep mounting up, while the imports from that country diminish. Owing to the new restrictions to foreign trade now being made operative, the remainder of the fiscal year should show a decided falling off in both imports and exports with practically all countries.

Queer Conceits Are Current.

All kinds of queer stories keep coming from Washington as to the kind of regulation that is to be attempted on men's and women's garments and the fabrics which enter into their construction. One of them, gravely printed in a trade periodical the other day, foretold of an effort to compel the use of cotton instead of woolen fabrics for garments even in Winter. Others have indicated the employment of official pressure to force styles which would use the minimum of material, snipping so much off the length of a woman's skirt or from its width. It is evident from these stories that some one is lacking in a sense of proportion or of humor. All concede that, while the war lasts, it must be the principal business of the nation and that everything must yield to it. But there is nothing so critical in the woolen situation as to call for measures of the kind indicated. There is enough wool here and in sight to provide for all needs for a year to come, and there is no reason why the civilian public as well as the forces in the field should not be supplied with clothing in keeping with the weather conditions. Nor is there any reason why every woman and every man should be restricted to any one fabric or style in what they wear. It will not help to win the war to put all civilians into a uniform. Economy should be practiced, but mere discomforts that can serve no purpose except to exasperate should be avoided.

The Swing of the Pendulum.

Believers in individualism have been dismayed at the progress made by collectivism in one form or another since the war began. The kind of efficiency which fighting begets runs in the direction of unified effort and standardizing. Quantity production of uniform quality is called for, whether it be in locomotives, firearms, blankets, airplanes, or any other article in demand. There are standard shoes and suits of clothes in various countries just as there are standard ships with standard engines inside them. For the making and the distribution of articles there have also been devised collective or co-operative agencies. At times it has looked as though individual effort or distinctiveness would have to go into the scrap heap with other outgrown and discarded appliances. But the signs are growing now that, when hostilities cease, the swing of the industrial pendulum will be toward the older ways, even though it came in the form of a protest against the drab and dull uniformity of the products of standardization. In Great Britain and Germany there have been outspoken protests against collectivism in shipping and in other branches of trade. Similarly there are indications, more or less evident, of a revolt against the continuance of the repression of things to wear to standards which war conditions only excuse. This is it that gives point to the advice of the cloth manufacturer of Bradford, England, who told the members of the Textile Society there to prepare for making fancy fabrics after the war, because they would then be so much in demand. Perhaps he had in mind what happened following the restoration of Charles II. after the puritanic Cromwell régime in England. Human nature does not change much with the centuries.

The Position of Cotton.

More of the violent fluctuations in cotton quotations to which the trade is becoming accustomed took place during the last week. Anything served as a pretext for pushing prices up or down, like the covering of shorts or a bit of rainfall in the growing sections. Meanwhile the statistical situation does not afford much of an excuse for advances in price. More cotton has come in sight and is being held in the storage centres in the South. Much less of it is being exported, the outbound shipments this year being about 1,200,000 bales below those of the same period in 1917. Nor does there seem much probability of much increased shipments in view of the great demand of shipping tonnage for more important purposes. The latest census report on the consumption of cotton in domestic mills again showed a decrease as compared with last year. A source of confidence, also, in higher prices for cotton which was made use of some time ago is no longer effective. This was the belief in a quick ending of the war, which would lead at once to a huge demand from abroad. No one now believes the war will end before another crop is available, and the best indications at present are that the new crop will be a large one. When it comes to the matter of cotton goods, however, the prices long since ceased to be dependent on the cost of the raw material. The mills are making hay while the sun shines and are getting every dollar of profit the traffic will bear. How much this is can be figured by taking the 39-inch 80-squares printcloth, now quoted at 25 cents a yard, or $1 per pound of cotton content. In colored goods the public demand is assisting in keeping up prices to a high notch. Knit goods deliveries continue to be delayed by reason of the priority of Government orders.

As to Wool and Woolens.

Prices for all kinds of wool have been definitely fixed by the Government, and this has resulted in stopping any tendency to a runaway market such as happened with regard to cotton. The manufacturers of woolens will obtain their raw material on the basis of the prices of July 30 last plus 7 per cent. At the same time those making fabrics for military uses will receive stated prices for them. These are such as to allow a very satisfactory profit. For 20 ounce worsteds the price is $4.10; for worsted warp and woolen filling $3.90, and for all woolen $3.75. The bulk of the orders will be on the first mentioned. There seems in some quarters a disposition to magnify the amount of wool which the Government will need. One statement was to the effect that only about 20,000,000 pounds will remain for civilian purposes for the remainder of the year. This is simply an absurdity. Imports of wool keep coming in, despite the alarmist statements to the contrary. In a single week the receipts of foreign wool at Boston from Cape Town and Buenos Aires totaled about 15,000,000 pounds. There is also a fair share of domestic wool being marketed. The goods market is unsettled because of the doubts as to deliveries, but these will soon be resolved. Meanwhile speculators are reaping a harvest in resales of fabrics to buyers who fear they will not be able later on to get what they need. This applies to cloths for both men's and women's wear. The big garment manufacturers seem however, to be well supplied.

ARE LESS LIBERAL IN SELLING TERMS

Jobbers Generally Through the Country Restricting Discount Allowances.

Answer to inquiries sent out by the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association to jobbers in all parts of the country, regarding selling terms and discounts, quite generally say that they are in full sympathy with efforts now being made to shorten terms in accordance with that action on the part of manufacturers. While the replies received showed a considerable variation of terms, two stood out as being the most favored. One of these was the 2/10, 1/30, net 60 basis of selling, and the other was 2/10, 60 days' dating. To a large extent these terms have superseded the 2/10/60, 60 extra, or net four months, basis that was in effect quite generally before the war, and which are still in vogue with certain wholesalers against their own best judgment.

As to the actual text of the replies received, one from a wholesaler in this city says: "Our regular terms to the trade are 2 per cent. off, 10 days, and net 30 days. The terms of net 30 are made for special sales. In our opinion, under the present abnormal conditions, terms and discounts should be reduced." Another local jobber wrote: "With very few exceptions we have standardized our terms to a net 30, no discount, basis."

A third firm replied that its terms for underwear and hosiery are 2/10 or 1/10/60, no extra dating, and that there is never any deviation from them excepting when goods are sold on a net cash basis. This firm has always been a believer in net terms.

"All classes of merchandise, hosiery, underwear, handkerchiefs, and furnishings sold by us," answered a Boston wholesale concern, "are on a net basis; that is, 1 per cent., 10 days from dating, with anticipation at 6 per cent. per annum for unexpired time. This is occasioned by allowing 60 days' dating to many of our customers, also dating of invoices sold in advance for Spring as May 1 and for Fall as Nov. 1."

This reply came from Philadelphia: "Regarding terms, we have decided on the following limit: Two per cent. if paid in 60 days from date of invoice, or net 90 days. No extra dating." Another jobber in the same city wrote: "For Spring goods delivered the last of December and during January we date Feb. 1, 60 extra. This includes woolen goods, cottons, and silks. Fall goods shipped during July we date Aug. 1, 60 extra. Goods shipped after Feb. 1 in the Spring, or Aug. 1 in the Fall, we date 60 days from shipment. This applies to all lines of our merchandise. Our discounts are 2/10, 1/30, on most of our goods. We have a few items in the silk department which we sell 6/10, 5/30. We do not sell on 60 days; our bills are due and payable 30 days from the dating. This applies to all dry goods lines."

A prominent jobbing concern in Pittsburg said that its terms are 2 per cent. off, 10 days, 30 days' net from May 1 on Spring goods and Nov. 1 on Fall and Winter goods. After March 1 and Sept. 1 its terms are 60 days extra, with the above terms added. This, the reply says, is very much too long, but that the house is compelled to do it because so many of the others do so. A Baltimore jobber answered that, in reference to white goods, notions, and ready to wear goods, there are two classes of merchandise. On one the terms are 2/10, 1/30, 60 extra, and on the other 6/10, 5/30, 4/60, 60 extra, or 7 per cent. "end of month."

From a big Chicago house came this answer:

"Our terms are as follows: January and February deliveries date April 1, July and August deliveries date Oct. 1. On all other deliveries bills are due in 60 days from their dates, with full ten-day discounts." In part, a Minneapolis merchant said: "Regarding discounts, we think it advisable that on a good share of the staple merchandise these can be quoted and sold on a net basis—that is, either 30 or net 60 days."

"We have probably shortened our terms to the extent of 30 days on at least half of our departments," replied a wholesaler in St. Louis. "In such departments where the advanced dating for Spring or Fall has not yet been shortened such goods must be paid for at the termination of the advance dating to earn discounts, and after 30 days bills are payable on a net cash basis without the privilege of taking additional time."

A well known wholesale concern in Salt Lake City claims the distinction of being the first in the country to shorten selling terms, and goes on: "The terms we make on all the lines of merchandise we carry are 2 per cent. discount for payment in 10 days. We have made these terms throughout our house and find they are working very nicely." On advance Spring and Fall orders this concern dates April 1 and Oct. 1, respectively, with the same discount, but no dating whatever is given on "filling-in" orders.

From a jobber in San Francisco this answer was received:

"We bill our goods as follows: Two per cent. 10 days, net 30 days, with 60 days dating. On Spring goods for shipment in January we date our bills April 1, and on Fall goods shipped in June and July we date them Oct. 1. There are but few exceptions to this rule. I must admit, however, that we are not very strict in forcing a settlement at the end of 90 days without discount. Our competition, both local and Eastern, allowing their bills to mature net 60 days from dating forces us to concede these terms in some cases."

Ribbon Trade Faced by War Needs.

It seems rather ironical, from the manufacturer's point of view, that with ribbons really good for the first time in several seasons there are reports that the Government is going to need many of the looms for the making of cartridge belts, webbing, &c. One thing that has made the ribbon business good this season is the demand that has sprung up for ribbon hats, both for dress and sports wear. In some of the latter the entire hat is made of corded ribbon, while others have the ribbon interlaced in a checkerboard effect. Narrow, picot-edged ribbon also is made use of in crowns and upper brims in certain types of sport hats. The lighter shades predominate in this class of goods.

BRAID IN MILLINERY.

Some of the Novelties Now Being Shown in Women's Hats.

Soutache braiding is now being used on fabric hats here to a considerable extent, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America.

"On hats of various materials," the bulletin says, "such as Georgette, taffeta, or organdie, soutache braid is being used around the edge of the brim or crown, in scroll effects on the entire crown or brim, and often in button effects. Both silk and cotton soutache are used. As many gowns are braided with soutache, the popularity of this trimming may be almost assured. On hats this braid is seen most often in sand, navy, white, and in various shades of light blue."

The bulletin also says that a diversity of shapes and materials is now in vogue here. Gold tissue, brocades, crêpe de chine, and Georgette are combined with straws that blend or contrast with the materials. Sponge cloths—like duvetyns, &c.—linen, tulle, and novelty straws also are used. Popular among the last-named is the new varnished "canvas hemp," which is shown in bright colors. Rough straws, fancy Swiss straws, &c., continue to be active sellers. Many of the milliners have used successfully a combination of highly lustred straw with dull straw in green with jade or copper, blue with gold, and flame with green. Gray, sand, lilac, navy, powder blue, some new tones of brown, and jade are the colors most generally favored at present.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

A Little More Quiet After the Recent Spurt of Activity.

The Japanese raw silk market continued quiet during the last week, and very little business was put through. Reelers, however, are still firm in their price views, and will not grant concessions other than a reduction of about 10 cents a pound for new silk for July shipment or later. The visible stock is now estimated at about 9,000 bales. While definite information regarding the size of the new crop is not available at the moment, it is reported that it will exceed last season's by about 10 per cent.

The Canton market has quieted down again, according to advices received by A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc., but there has been no change in prices. A rise in exchange has helped steady quotations in this market. Shanghai has also settled down to a more normal basis after a short period of activity. While there was some buying of tsatlees, tussahs, and steam filatures, it was in much smaller quantities than the week before.

The Italian market continues unchanged, with prices very firmly held. Locally the manufacturers are rather busy, but there has been very little raw silk buying. This is attributed to the expectations of most buyers of lower prices in the near future.

PRINTCLOTH PRICES FIRM.

Goods Getting Scarce, and Higher Levels Seem Imminent.

Further buying of 38½-inch 60-48s at 16 cents for June and July delivery was done in the local gray goods market yesterday, and these purchases virtually cleaned up all cloths of this construction available for shipment this side of August under 16¼ cents. Particularly is this true of Eastern-made goods. For June-July deliveries of 38½-inch 60-52s 16½ cents is asked. Spots and nearby contracts of 38½-inch 64-60s were sold at 18½ cents.

The outstanding feature of the market at the moment is the scarcity of merchandise, due both to advance buying by the civilian trade of goods to come from the looms in the next several months and to the purchases of the Government and the Red Cross. Second hands, who played such prominent parts in bringing about the recent recessions from the record price levels that prevailed several weeks ago, have now apparently sold all the goods they can afford to, and are re-entering the market as buyers. As a result, a steady hardening of values is looked for in the immediate future.

Silk and Fibre Sweaters.

For the last week or two the demand at retail for wool sweaters of all but the sleeveless variety is said to have fallen off somewhat. Silk sweaters and those of fibre silk, however, seem to be getting a great deal of the business which wool sweaters have been passing up. Manufacturers report that they are consequently getting quite a few re-orders for silk garments for filling in purposes. Fibre silk sweaters for sports wear, in a heavy jersey weave that makes the garment look more like a coat than a sweater, are reported to be particularly popular.

Molybdenum in Norway.

Tests of the deposit of molybdenum, which was discovered last Fall at Lier, Norway, have shown definitely that the metal is of good quality, and that the deposit is an extensive one. The property was taken over by a group of business men soon after its discovery, and the tests followed. The metal is found in quartz veins, and is embedded in granite. The ore-bearing veins have a breadth of only about two inches, but the metal is in such concentrated form that it can be prepared for the market with a minimum of labor.

Camphor for This Country.

The Monopoly Bureau of the Government General of Taiwan has apportioned 450,000 kin of crude camphor for export to the United States during April, May, and June, according to a dispatch from Consul Max D. Kirjasoff in Taihoku. An apportionment for every three months thereafter will be made, according to the productive capacity of the bureau.

FALL GARMENT OUTLOOK.

Prices the Great Stumbling Block for Buyers and Sellers.

The question of Fall garment prices is proving a stumbling block this year, both for buyers and sellers, according to the bulletin of the National Garment Retailers' Association, which says:

"The prevailing uncertain condition existing in the garment field seems to forecast a season unusual in many ways. Much more skill is required in designing garments whose prime essential is a combination that comprises smartness of style with conservation of fabric.

"The hampering rein today that interferes with progress in the garment field is price. More than ever before is this factor keenly discussed between buyer and salesman, in the showroom, or on the road. In previous seasons the early road trip would include everything that has been produced in the sample rooms, regardless of price, but with consideration only for excellence of style and superiority of design. Today the salesmen are finding that the one cardinal error is the taking of new Fall numbers that are high in price, even though made of excellent fabrics and lined with silks of superior grade.

"The attitude of the salesmen is that it is really useless to take these garments along with them, and they have actually discarded several models that were considered good style by the manufacturer, though they seemed to figure too high when the selling prices were decided on.

"The extravagant silk braiding so extensively used during the last Fall season is conspicuously absent in the models on view at the various showrooms. Fur trimming is not used so much as a decoration as for warmth, and plush, Astrakhan cloth, and duvetyn are used as fur substitutes. These will be greatly augmented by the introduction of Angora cloth.

"Small velour checks are used for suits in the more subdued colors, whereas quite large checks and Scottish plaids are shown in coats, with Stuart plaids predominating. Suit jackets are rather longer, following the prediction from Paris that suits will be longer this Fall. The most stylish stouts shown have the knee-length lines, for their popularity is perpetual."

IN THE HARDWARE LINES.

Household Goods Sell, but Builders' Materials Inactive.

Buying in the local hardware market is becoming less of a seasonal matter and more of an all-year proposition, according to reports from authorities in this trade. Under present conditions it is said that many retailers do not care, for various reasons, to load up with merchandise covering their requirements too far into the future. At the same time retail business seems not to be as dull as it was last Winter, and merchants need supplies in fair quantities. Consequently they are buying more frequently, though ordering less at a time than they normally did in the past.

Though household hardware is thus seen to be moving fairly well, builders' lines are reported still to be very inactive. There have been few, if any, building licenses applied for or issued, and the amount of building now in course of construction is trifling. But little activity is looked for in this direction for some time to come. About the only orders being placed now for builders' hardware are for minor replacements and repairs.

Mexican Duties on Shoes.

The Mexican import duties on footwear have been increased, according to Consul General Chamberlain in Mexico City, the new rates having gone into effect on May 10. The following changes are announced: Men's leather boots, from 3 to 4.20 pesos a pair; footwear in general other than boots and slippers, measuring up to 4.72 inches in the sole, from 0.70 to 1.00 peso a pair; footwear measuring from 4.72 to 7.87 inches in the sole, from 1.15 to 1.60 pesos a pair; footwear measuring more than 7.87 inches in the sole, from 1.75 to 2.50 pesos a pair.

Waist Manufacturers to Meet.

About 200 of the country's most representative waist manufacturers, from this city, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Cleveland, will be here tomorrow night to attend a meeting of the United Waist League of America that will be held in the Green Room of the Hotel McAlpin at 8 o'clock. At the meeting, officers and directors for the coming year will be elected and committee reports will be made. The principal theme of ways and means of eliminating the of ways and emans of eliminating the element of waste in the industry.

Offers a Novel Powder Puff.

A local concern dealing in novelties has put on the market an attractive powder puff in the form of a Kewpie attired in a ballet dress of maline. The kewpie figure is attached to the puff, and the dress is made in blue, pink, and yellow. In each case it matches the color of the graceful glass powder container. It is an article that is both useful and ornamental, and can be retailed at popular prices.

SALE OF FIREARMS.

It Is Curiously Affected by the War Now in Progress.

The war has had two opposite effects on the sale of fire arms. On one side there has been a decided decrease in shooting wild game, due also in part to the enactment and enforcement of Federal game laws protecting migratory birds. This is evident not only in the falling off in sales of shotguns, but also of loaded shells and hunting appurtenances. On the other hand, the Government demand for munitions of war has not only created a pronounced scarcity in many lines directly affected, such as metallic cartridges and revolvers, but also in those lines where this Government demand has shifted the use of men and machinery from articles like sporting rifles and shotguns to rifles needed for the soldiers, thus creating a great scarcity of the former articles in the domestic trade.

It is very difficult to get revolvers at all for the regular trade, and automatic pistols practically cannot be had. Loaded shells for trap shooting sell only in a very limited way, for clay pigeon shooting is a sport kept up almost entirely in times of peace by persistent propaganda. Naturally, in time of war it falls to a very low estate. The sale of blank cartridges, formerly used mostly for Fourth of July celebrations and the like, is practically extinct now, as a matter of conserving men and material to make cartridges for war purposes.

The demand for leggings for army uses far outstrips the supply, while those for hunting purposes sell in much reduced volume. All kinds of reloading tools and implements in connection with the hunter loading his own shells are practically a thing of the past, and linger on in a fast-dying fashion.

India's Wheat Crop.

The Indian Department of Statistics reports that the revised estimate of the wheat forecast for 1917-18 places the wheat area for all India at 33,885,000 acres instead of 33,912,000 acres as reported in the first estimate. The condition of the standing crop is said to be good except in the unirrigated sections of the Punjab and of the Northwest Frontier Province, in parts of Bihar, Orrissa and of Bengal. This amounts to about 49 per cent. of the wheat area in the Punjab, 51 per cent. in the United Provinces, and 72 per cent. in the Northwest Frontier Province. Some damage by frost is reported from Punjab and the Central Provinces, and by rats in parts of Sind.

BUSINESS NOTES.

S. J. Shwartz, President of the Maison Blanche Company of New Orleans, is now in this city on a buying trip and is stopping at the Hotel Plaza. While here he will look at general lines of merchandise at the company's local office, 116 West Thirty-second Street. Mr. Shwartz arrived in this city from Washington, where he attended a meeting of the State merchants' representatives of the United States Food Administration. Not only is he the representative for Louisiana but he is also in charge of the War Savings Stamp sales in that State. In addition to this, he is Director of Supplies for the Red Cross in Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi.

The Eastern Flexible Conduit Company has changed its name to the Eastern Tube and Tool Company, Inc., having added to its former line the manufacture of drill chucks and small tools. The business address of the company is 594 Johnson Avenue, Brooklyn.

—Pay your war taxes with our money

You have no notes to meet—your customers pay us off. No obligation as to time or volume—You can quit any time.

Some FOUR BILLION Dollars will be needed in June to pay Income and Excess Profits Taxes. High prices, embargoes, uncertain deliveries, etc., also have greatly increased the demand for money, to say nothing of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross Campaign, etc.

Many very prosperous Firms, having large Taxes to pay in June, will see how easily the sale of part of their open accounts to us will answer their purpose—even if they never give us any further business. They will then experience what a simple, convenient and satisfactory plan we have for supplying temporary or permanent Capital.

If all of your customers discounted your bills in June you would doubtless have ample money for your needs. The discounts to which they would be entitled would no doubt be much more than our charge for carrying their accounts for you, without their knowledge. You collect their accounts as usual, for us.

Why not sell us $5,000 to $250,000 or more of your accounts and not disturb your other resources? The total cost is only 1-30 of 1% per day (1% a month) on the face of accounts from date of our purchase until paid, plus $5.00 a $1,000 only on the first $100,000 within a year. No Interest, Commission, or Exchange.

In 1917 $20,134,577.83 of our volume of $51,078,171.11 came from Manufacturers and Wholesalers rated $100,000 to over $1,000,000. We solicit a trial, NOW.

Women Making Their Own Dresses.

It is said that the number of women who are making their own dresses is growing constantly larger. There is reported to be a great demand for patterns of various house and morning dresses, and for the materials of which they are to be made. Ginghams are taken a great deal for this purpose. Checks and plaids in light pastel shades on white backgrounds are popular. In many of them green is used in varying degrees of prominence. Natural linen and several pure white cotton fabrics are also in demand.

NOCTURNE. By Frank Swinnerton. George H. Doran Company. $1.40 net.

WHEN "The Happy Family" was published a few years ago, critics were not wanting—the present reviewer being among them—who realized that here was a new writer of very exceptional gifts. Mr. Swinnerton's succeeding novels confirmed the impression produced by his first, but always with a suggestion of better things in prospect, of promise rather than of complete fulfillment. And now we have that fulfillment, in this new and very artistic book he calls "Nocturne." Which, of course, does not mean that Mr. Swinnerton may not do even finer work in the future, but only that with this book he has definitely "arrived" as a literary artist. "The Happy Family" gave him a place among those writers to whom we look for really significant work; but it lacked that quality of humanness in artistry which distinguishes his latest book.

Mr. H. G. Wells, in the enthusiastic "Introduction" which he has written for "Nocturne," declares that "only a novelist who has had his troubles" can really appreciate what a remarkable performance is the chapter entitled "After the Theatre"; and this criticism applies in great measure to the entire book. It is his fellow-craftsmen who will best appreciate what Mr. Swinnerton has accomplished in the presentation of what happened to Jenny and Emmy Blanchard during the hours between 6 o'clock and dawn, on that night which had been "the one poignant moment of their lives, an evening to provide reflections for a thousand other evenings." For remarkable, sure, and perfect in its artistry as is the scene between Emmy and Alf to which Mr. Wells alludes, it is only a little more difficult to handle, only a little more of an achievement, than are the earlier scenes between Emmy and Jenny and Alf, Emmy and Jenny, and Jenny and Alf.

Mr. Swinnerton is first, last, and all the time a realist. Neither Jenny nor Emmy is a conventional "novel heroine," but each is a genuine human being, and their relations are portrayed with swift, dexterous strokes. Sisters, three years apart in age, entirely different in desires and point of view and temperament, circumstances had not only built barriers between them but also engendered a sense of rivalry which "colored every moment of their domestic life." Emmy had been dominated, first by her mother, later by the stronger-willed, quicker-tongued Jenny. She had to look back upon nothing but "a series of chagrins of which each was the harder to bear because of the history of its precursors." Yet she wanted comparatively little, just the ordinary, simple things of everyday, humdrum existence, while Jenny wanted a great deal, wanted freedom and a life "away from stuffy rooms and endless millinery, away from regular hours and tedious meals, away from all that now made up her daily dullness." Emmy was of those who are strong in endurance, Jenny of those who are strong in revolt; and Mr. Swinnerton wins and holds the reader's sympathy for both of them.

The scene is laid principally in the London suburb called Kennington Park. Here, in one of the small houses, exactly like the other small houses, rows and rows of which make up the suburb, Emmy and Jenny live with "Pa." Pa had suffered a paralytic stroke some years before the story opens, and so it is necessary for one of his two daughters to stay at home and look after him. This portion of the household drudge falls to Emmy, who, when her mother died, had grasped the domestic reins and "made the care of the household her lot"; now she found herself bearing "the cares of the household"—a very different matter—while the more adventurous Jenny went into the millinery, augmenting their father's pension by her wages, spending long hours in a close room, returning at night to the tiny house full of the smell of the stew and bread-pudding she detested, and which symbolized her life.

The presentation of the relations of the two girls to each other and to the well-nigh helpless old man who is their father is almost if not quite flawless in its skill and truth and insight. Their irritation and jealousy, which the author makes one feel to be the result of the accumulation of years, their mental pictures of each other's natures and of their own, pictures in which the false mingled with and distorted the true, so that each was able to exalt herself in her own eyes at the other's expense, their care for the old man whom they loved yet half despised and at times almost hated as the cause of their bondage—all this is absolutely real. The atmosphere of this domesticity in which "politeness" was not supposed to have any place, is reproduced with such fidelity that we feel as though we actually stood in the little kitchen where every scarred pot bore witness to Emmy's savage resentment of her solitary drudgery and the convulsive clock was reminiscent of the time Jenny "chucked the cosy at Alf." The suburban theatre, the yacht riding at anchor on the dark waters of the Thames which filled Jenny with so many fears, are scarcely less clearly seen and described.

Of the two men who with Pa complete the limited dramatic personae, Alf is by all odds the more real. Keith somehow eludes the reader, even as he eluded Jenny. But Alf, the crude, vain and inarticulate, honest, kindly and hard-working Alf, is an admirably rounded portrait. His slowness, stupidity and tenacity in the conflict with Jenny's quick and audacious tongue, the mixture of condescension and relief with which he turns to the more understandable Emmy, his lack of sensitiveness and his shamefacedness and his simple, workaday ideals, render him a person whose future, as well as his past and present, we know very well indeed. And in fact it would not be difficult to outline the future of any one of Mr. Swinnerton's characters—a future not exactly the one he foresaw when he conceived them, however, for unless we are very greatly mistaken, that happened before the coming of the war, and it is easy to imagine that in the changed world brought about by the conflict Keith and Jenny have found such congenial opportunities as they never even dreamed of. This ability to make imaginative people so real that one feels certain that while the author has withdrawn the curtain from a part of their lives, those lives were going on before the lifting of the curtain and continue to go on after it has fallen, which Mr. Swinnerton showed in "The Chaste Wife" is yet more apparent in "Nocturne."

Mr. Swinnerton's style is clear and flexible, with occasional touches of poetic beauty, a great deal of deft, illuminative phrasing, and that use of the right word which is so very difficult and produces an effect of such ease and simplicity. He is not writing of very refined people; but there is in his work nothing of coarseness. One shudders to think of what the average, would-be realistic writer, whose idea of realism is to dilate on repellent details, would have done with the figure of Pa, which Mr. Swinnerton has drawn with so much sympathy and humor. Poor, old Pa, with his pipe and his mug of beer and his desire for "noos," so "complacently aware" of the arrangements for his comfort after the accident, and without a particle of contrition for the "naughtiness" which so upset the other three! Mr. Wells declares his belief that "Nocturne" is a book "that will not die." Whether he is right or wrong, time must prove, but certain it is that this new novel by Frank Swinnerton is a book which will command the admiration and applause of the discriminating among novel readers.

FOE-FARRELL

FOE-FARRELL. By "Q." (Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch.) With frontispiece. The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

WHATEVER else may be said either for or against Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch's new novel, "Foe-Farrell," no one can possibly deny that it is a book of very great variety. Tragedy and the most uproarious kind of farce, light comedy, and exciting adventure, love that is stronger than death, and hate which not merely dominates life, but alters character—all these meet and jostle one another in its 350-odd pages. Yet it is primarily a story of hate, the story of a vengeance which turned in a horrible and subtle way upon the avenger. And it is a story which begins with its climax; we are told of the dreadful, seemingly inexplicable thing which happened, and then we are taken back to the very commencement of it all, and shown how and why the murder came to pass.

The tale is related by Major Sir Roderick Otway, in a dugout "which served for officers' mess of a field battery somewhere near the Aisne," related during twenty-five successive nights to an audience composed of two or three younger officers. It is not a war story, however, though Otway finds in it a moral for certain aspects of the war. The prologue describes how one evening, when no mail had been received for a long time, young Sammy Barham read out from a bit of old newspaper an account of a mysterious murder, and Otway gave the date on which it happened and then proceeded to tell how and why it was committed. For Otway had been the close friend of one of the two men involved, and he knew the truth of the matter as did no one else—except, perhaps, Jimmy Collingwood. For Otway and Collingwood were both at that political meeting where Peter Farrell first made those incorrect and foolish accusations which so angered John Foe, and were the beginning of it all. It was those stupid says, "who are real and dear to me, I have pictured them in the sunny days of peace. But in my vision, at least, the shadow of the war lies over them, as it does in retrospect over all immediately pre-war fictional characters." Then he goes on to tell what, in his vision of them, would have happened by this time to each of his half dozen or more principal people.

Mr. Marshall thinks that whatever economic changes may result from the war affecting those who live by the land, whether as employers or laborers, the effect upon the social life of English country houses will be slight, because English people do not go "back to the land," but back to the country. Of his own novels he says:

> I have not set out to present an all-round picture of the conditions of country life in any of the fictional districts I have chosen as the scene of my novels. The great majority of the inhabitants of any countryside are the people who work on the land and live by it, and these I have left out almost entirely; not because I do not recognize their actual importance, but because in the social scene of my stories they would not appear, or only in a very minor degree. It may be an unsatisfactory state of things that divides people off in that way, into social strata, but it undoubtedly exists, and it is not the business of a novelist to justify the conditions he finds, but to reflect them; unless, of course, he sets out to make a discussion of those conditions the basis of his story.

THE HAPPIEST TIME

THE HAPPIEST TIME OF THEIR LIVES. By Alice Duer Miller. Illustrated by Paul Meylan. New York: The Century Company. $1.40.

ONE may regard Mrs. Miller's new novel from one of several viewpoints, and read it for a variety of reasons. It is quite possible to look upon it merely as a sweet little story of young love, of a boy and girl who fell in love with each other romantically and charmingly, and who determined to marry and live happy ever after in spite of all the obstacles in the way. One may enjoy it, on the other hand, as one enjoys all of Mrs. Miller's work, because it is a brilliant story of New York "society," delightfully and sparklingly written. Or one may find in it something deeper than these—a character study of two women, and through them and their reactions an examination into the whole question of women's relation to men and to society. Its cleverness, indeed, is not mere surface brilliance; it is keen satire as well. But whatever one seeks in the novel—so long as it is something clean and bright—and from whatever standpoint one approaches "The Happiest Time of Their Lives," it is a book that will be thoroughly enjoyed.

As young romance, it is the story of Mathilde Severance, 18, and Pete Wayne, in his early twenties, who fell in love at first sight. There was no great reason why they should not be allowed to marry, except that they were very young, and that Mathilde's mother had been a Lanley, and Mathilde was very beautiful and inexperienced—she was almost sure to make a brilliant marriage one of these days, her mother argued, if she did not throw herself away now on an undistinguished youth with only his salary to live on, and—to Mathilde's mother's way of thinking—no "family" at all. For Pierson Wayne's father had merely been a good physician, his mother was a social reformer, and they lived in a "walk-up" apartment and had only one maid. This was no marriage for Mathilde Severance!

It becomes evident very early in the progress of lovely little Mathilde's romance that the principal "feminine parts" in the novel are played, not by her, but by her mother, and Pete Wayne's. Adelaide Farron had divorced her first husband, Mathilde's father, because he was weak and insignificant; she adored Vincent Farron, whom she met and married long after the divorce, because he was strong. She was herself a singularly virile personality, beautiful, clever, masterful—the sort of woman who never allowed herself to be conquered by circumstance, who always "got her own way"; but weakness in men she could not endure. Temperamentally she was more than a little of a bully. She was only 38 when Mathilde fell in love with Pete Wayne; she had been married to Vincent Farron five years; the story is of a crisis in their relation, as well as of the young romance of Pete and Mathilde.

Against the elaborate, self-conscious, self-absorbed Adelaide is set in sharp contrast the personality of Mrs. Wayne, who has given her life to work with reformed drunkards, who is in her own unconscious fashion as exquisite as Mrs. Farron, and who is equally opposed, on social grounds, to her son's marriage with Mathilde. Mrs. Wayne has small reason to admire the sheltered, pampered, doll-like daughters of the rich; this is not the kind of wife who is fit for her son; it is not until she comes to know Mathilde herself that she is able

The Restless Sex

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

Stephanie Quest—beautiful, lovable, a devotee of every strange whim and fancy conceived in the imaginative minds of New York's artist colony. She marries a splendid man—and then finds herself in love with his best friend. Only Robert W. Chambers could unravel so tangled a plot realistically, yet differently. Only Mr. Chambers could tell such a moving, dramatic tale of the carefree people of "Bohemia." "The Restless Sex" is, in every way, as fine and as interesting as "The Common Law." NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

A MINSTREL IN FRANCE. By Harry Lauder. Illustrated. New York: Hearst's International Library Company.

HARRY LAUDER, beloved of all the English-speaking world, whether of Europe, America, Australasia, or the islands of the seas, has written a book and made a new revelation of himself. The personality that he reveals is as different from that his audiences have known as if he were another person. Its appeal is very touching, it goes straight to the heart, and it will be as efficient in inspiring sympathy and tears as his songs have been in inspiring gayety and laughter. Most readers will look upon the book, perhaps, as a memorial to his son, Captain John Lauder of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, who was killed in battle at the end of December, 1916, although it is much more than ordinarily a memorial book would be. For it is the father's story, with the son breathing through every page of it, just as he lives constantly in the broken heart of his father.

HARRY LAUDER

The book is written in the simplest style, with just enough of the Scottish dialect to give it pungency, and with a certain friendly familiarity, as if Harry Lauder himself were sitting across the table from you and telling you all about it in the intimacy of friendship. The narrative begins with the Autumn of 1913 and Mr. Lauder's tour across this country and on to Australia. While he was there war was declared and Britain joined the conflict. Not much has been told in this part of the world about how the war came to the British possesions in the Southern seas, and so Mr. Lauder's very graphic pages of what happened there before he left on his return trip are a real contribution to general knowledge. There is a good deal about his own work for the war in Great Britain, where he sent a band of pipers skirling up and down the land to help on the recruiting and himself sang and talked men into the lines.

About half the book deals with his tour of the battlefront and the camps in France, whither he went after the death of his son. For some time he had continued his work before audiences in England, although grief for his well-beloved son had made it hard for him to make people laugh while his own heart was bleeding. But people had urged him not to quit, because thus he lightened a little the gloom of hearts and homes and gave entertainment to the thousands of men at home on leave. They told him he must take to himself the last words of his son and "carry on." But at last he secured official sanction for his scheme of going straight to the front and singing and talking to the soldiers there. With him went the Rev. George Adam and James Hogge, M. P. And the Tommies promptly styled the combination "The Rev. Harry Lauder, M. P., Tour." The absurd name stuck to them, he says, and by it they were known throughout the whole journey in France and up and down the battleline.

They had with them, built for and contributed to the expedition, a tiny piano weighing 150 pounds and carried in their motor car. They went everywhere in the battle zone, even into the front trenches, and sang and talked in dugouts, in trenches, along the road, in rest billets, in hospitals, and everywhere they were welcomed warmly. It is an interesting account that he gives of the battle zone and one that, just because his mission was unique, is different from any other that has been written. No matter how many war books one has read it is still worth while to read Harry Lauder's narrative of his pilgrimage. It is good to read, too, because of its patriotism, its simple, grim, unshakable belief, and its understanding of other people's hearts. And now and then there is a bit of interesting information, as when he mentions that Scotland, out of a total population of 5,000,000, has sent 1,000,000 men to the front. It is a wonderful record, and he well says that it has never been matched by any other country.

Some of the knockers and kickers in America and those who still talk, parrot-like, with admiration about "German efficiency" might profitably read this paragraph, which Mr. Lauder writes as a consequence of seeing Folkestone, a British port of embarkation, last June:

> I hear praise, even from men who hate the Hun as I hate him, for the superb military organization of the German Army. They say the Kaiser's people may well take pride in that. But I say that I am prouder of what Britain and the new British Army that has come into being since this war began have done than any German has a right to be! They spent forty-four years in making ready for a war they meant, some day, to fight. We had not had, that day that I first saw our machine really functioning, as many months for preparation as they had had years. And yet we were doing our part.

FLASHES FROM THE FRONT

FLASHES FROM THE FRONT. By Charles H. Grasty. Illustrations by Muirhead Bone, with photographs lent by the British Government. New York: The Century Company. $2.

IN this volume is gathered a selection from the dispatches cabled by Mr. Grasty to THE NEW YORK TIMES from England, France, Italy, and Switzerland, covering the period from December, 1916, down to March of this year. Beginning with the disturbed times of Bethmann Hollweg's peace talk, President Wilson's note to the belligerents, and the statements of war aims that were flung back and forth until the German announcement of unrestricted submarine war put an end to the discussion and gave the war a wholly new turn, the dispatches come down to the weeks just before the opening of the present and perhaps decisive campaign. It is America's first year of war, and something more; for almost the first dispatches in the book are those dealing with England's suspicious and resentful reception of President Wilson's apparent placing of the two alliances on a parity, and his talk of peace without victory. It was a time when many men in this country as well as in Europe were wondering if the drift of events might not thrust us into the war, but on the wrong side. One of the pleasantest features of Mr. Grasty's dispatches from London in those difficult times is his firm confidence in an interpretation of President Wilson's course which has been borne out by subsequent events. And the bulk of the book is made up of messages sent under happier circumstances, during the period when America was getting ready for the shipment of her armies in force, when Americans were greeted by the democracies of Western Europe as friends and at last as companions in the struggle.

The title of the volume is happily chosen, for Mr. Grasty has been a roving correspondent for the most part and his searchlight does not rest upon the same object for long at a time. But the flashes cast much light upon a great deal of modern history in the process of becoming. Indeed, the value of such comment upon the course of events by an observer of an exceptionally wide acquaintance and great experience is very well expressed in the following message from General Pershing, which begins the book:

> This great war is teaching new things every day. War on such a scale affords unprecedented opportunity for originality. While methods change, human character remains, and other things being equal, character will decide the last battle.
> This war found us as a nation nakedly unprepared, but our people had the stamina, the moral sense, the instinct for the light and the right. It is a fine thing to us soldiers in the service to look toward home and see a mighty people responding to the call of idealism, turning nobly toward duty in the splendid spirit expressed in the phrase, "the utmost for the highest." We may make mistakes here and there in this detail or that, but we have the practical mind, and with each new experience we shall move to a higher level of excellence.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

Of the human material that America is sending to this war I can speak with exactness. It is the best, and with enough of such material there can be no doubt of America's showing. I have always had only one opinion of American soldiers, and that opinion has been more than confirmed in France. Given the opportunity, the American Army in France will fulfill the best that has been expected of it.

The history of this war cannot be written without the perspective that time alone can give. In the meanwhile such chronicles as the author has presented supply the public with current information and preserve a useful record for the historian. The exceptional opportunities of observation enjoyed by the author will make this volume one of the best among contemporary publications on the war.

Mr. Grasty's opportunities have indeed been exceptional. He came back from Corunna with Ambassador Gerard and crossed to Paris with Pershing. His dispatches take the reader to fiercely determined Milan and coolly indifferent Rome just after the Isonzo disaster; to Switzerland, alive with propagandist agents of all countries; to the reconquered corner of Alsace, still under the menace of German guns; to London under air bombardment, or in the midst of one or another political crisis; to shattered Rheims; and to the French, British, and Canadian troops at the front, as well as the American forces arriving in France and beginning their long training. Character sketches of Joffre, Painlevé, Pétain; of Asquith, Lloyd George, Balfour, Northcliffe, and Sir Horace Plunkett; of Pershing, Gerard, and Baker show the allied leaders as seen by one who has been able to study them through extended association.

The dispatches are grouped into chapters arranged according to the topics that from time to time return to the front of public interest, and in one or two cases more clarity would have been produced by keeping all instead of only a few of the newspaper date lines. Drawings by Muirhead Bone and photographs from the British Government illustrate a dozen phases of modern war on land and sea.

There is an amusing introduction by Ian D. Colvin of The London Morning Post, who after formal mention of Mr. Grasty plunges into a long but diverting essay upon Germany's economic penetration of England in the old days of the Hanseatic League and the more recent era of free trade Liberalism, and the necessity of a protective tariff to keep the Teuton from again making himself dangerous by his commercial influence on Britain's sources of wealth.

A PRINTER'S TRAVELS

SEVEN LEGS ACROSS THE SEAS. A Printer's Impressions of Many Lands. By Samuel Murray. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. $2.50.

MR. MURRAY is a printer by trade and a born traveler. What is particularly noteworthy in his account of very wide travels is the economic manner in which he has been able to accomplish them. Printers, as is well known, have a roving disposition, but it is safe to say that few of them have roved so far and wide. The journey represented in this book consumed 1,176 days and the distance traveled was 73,689 miles. Mr. Murray started with the slender capital for this long journey of but $1,350. However, as he is an expert printer and linotype operator, he was enabled to pick up odd jobs in various countries amounting to $2,475. This makes an average expenditure for all the incidents of travel of about $3.50 per day, a modest sum, which discloses excellent financiering.

Starting from New York for England, London was taken in and passage secured from Southampton for South America, where several ports were visited; then South Africa, Zululand, and Victoria Falls in Rhodesia; Australia, New Zealand, and the principal South Sea Island groups; then back to Africa and up the East Coast to Zanzibar and Mombasa; next through British East Africa to and across Victoria Nyanza into Uganda. Leaving Africa, the enterprising traveler sailed over the Indian Ocean to India, visiting, among other places, the lofty regions of the Himalaya Mountains, and afterward Ceylon. From Colombo the travel was eastward to the Straits Settlements, Philippines, China, and Japan, concluding with the Hawaiian Islands.

As the major part of this quite extensive journey was by water, the author uses the nautical word "leg" as a designating term for the various sections of the world visited. Mr. Murray does not pick out many "I's" from his printing case; he has subordinated his own observations and experiences to an immense amount of practical information which he has packed within the 400 pages of his book. This makes it all the more valuable for any traveler who follows in Mr. Murray's footsteps in any of the many lands which this close observer visited. Union printers especially will be enabled to profit by the author's experiences, for he tells how he was able to add to his capital in some of the ports he visited. In many of the countries he was in, as he tells us in his narrative, the wages of printers are so low that an American member of his trade would scorn to work for them. It was in South Africa that Mr. Murray found his best opportunity and here he netted $2,400. In part, he tells of his experiences as follows:

> As stated in the early part of this volume, I had $1,350 when I left New York. On returning to Durban I had $637. With that sum I was about to start for India. The second day after reaching Durban, however, I obtained work on the leading newspaper, which furnished me with employment for six months. My wages averaged $40 a week. Modest comforts were good enough for me, and, living expenses being reasonable, I was enabled to put away a snug sum. Work was there for me if I wished to "drop in" the next year, so I promised to be on hand. This opened an opportunity to visit another continent—Australia—which I had not taken into calculation before leaving New York, as at that time I had not money enough to do so. So, early in January, I was on my way to the Antipodes.
> On my return from Australia I took another trip to Johannesburg and back. I went to work the first of August and continued to the first of December. Then I made a trip to Zululand, and upon my return was again offered work. As I had not enough money for the remainder of the journey, I decided to stay. Taking another trip to East London, King Williamstown, up through Kaffraria to Cradock, Bloemfontein, Kimberley, Johannesburg, Pretoria, and back to Pietermaritzburg and Durban, in the middle of March, 1912, I went to work for the third time, and finally bid good-bye to Durban in July following.

It is not given to every one to be able to combine business and pleasure in this way, but it is given to journeymen printers, many of whom have wandered over the face of the earth. Therefore it is to printers that this informative record of wanderings that occupied four years will make the strongest appeal.

WAR AND ADVERTISING

THE AIR LINE TO LIBERTY: A Prospectus for All Nations. By Gerald Stanley Lee. New York: Mitchell Kennerley. $1.25.

Mr. Gerald Stanley Lee's "big idea" is quite simple: It is advertising. Advertising ought eventually, he tells us, to take the place of war. Advertising ought indeed to stop this one. This is the way he sums it up:

> What the war is going to end in is a huge Advertising Clearing House for the World. The nations that discover that this is true and that start the clearing house first and make it work first will be the nations that will win for their civilization its way with the world.
> Advertising will make disarmament safe because it will be a working method of removing the causes of war.
> Advertising will make international police safe because we will advertise into being a moral centre of mutual interests the police can represent.
> Advertising will make the decision of an international court a working decision because it is the only way in which the people who have to abide by the decisions of an international court can be got to see why they should.

And so on, for 370 pages. Mr. Lee explains his idea, elaborates it, suggests the working out of its practical details. The United States, he says, should "advertise" its ideals to Germany; he urges the adoption of a "new bomb," which will fire editorials from American newspapers, &c., into Germany from airplanes. Hence the title of the book.

Insects

Entomological students will be pleased with a work entitled "Field Book of Insects," prepared for their use by Frank E. Lutz, Associate Curator of Invertebrate Zoology at the American Museum of Natural History. The book is designed to help in the identification and study of insects, especially those of the northeastern section of the United States. There are about 800 admirable illustrations in the volume, many of which are in color. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.)

Three new Century Books:—

THE HAPPIEST TIME OF THEIR LIVES

By ALICE DUER MILLER, author of "Come Out of the Kitchen!" etc.

A love story in New York. Mrs. Miller here strikes a deeper, kinder note than in any of her other novels; and the new story is presented with the brilliant wit, the infectious gaiety, the stimulating verve and vigor for which her work is so well known. Illustrated. Price $1.40. (No lover of fiction can go wrong in reading or giving "The Happiest Time of Their Lives.")

FLASHES FROM THE FRONT

By CHARLES H. GRASTY: Foreword by General Pershing.

General Pershing says: "The exceptional opportunities of observation enjoyed by Mr. Grasty will make this volume one of the best among contemporary publications on the war." This book is the cream of the material gathered in Europe by one of the greatest correspondents from this side of the Atlantic—flashing sidelights on the outstanding men and events of the war. Illustrated. Price $2.00. (Not a book to thrill or chill your backbone; it satisfies something higher up—your head.)

THE ROOTS OF THE WAR

By WILLIAM STEARNS DAVIS

President Wilson said: "The roots of this war run deep into all the obscure soils of history." Professor William Stearns Davis, in collaboration with William Anderson and Mason W. Tyler, all three of the University of Minnesota, have gone after those roots; and in setting forth in detail European history from 1870 to 1914 they have presented a narrative as fascinating as its materials are authoritative. 6 maps. Price $1.50. (You can now get the facts to back you up when you talk about the "causes of the war.")

About what novel of recent days—or years—could the Literary Editor of a newspaper of the standing of The Sun (New York) say (in a review covering a whole page):

Rebecca West's Verdict—"Let us recall what Miss West said about it: 'The year's discovery has been Mary Webb, author of GONE TO EARTH. She is a genius and I shouldn't mind wagering that she is going to be the most distinguished writer of our generation.'"

The Impressiveness of GONE TO EARTH—"GONE TO EARTH is the most impressive English novel since Thomas Hardy gave us Tess of the D'Urbervilles. It has many points of resemblance to Tess."

The Characters of the Story—"They are put before us with exquisite and unobtrusive humor and understanding. There is fun in this book; make no mistake about that. There is comprehension, which is of far more importance; and there is the power to convey, which is most important of all."

FRANCE AND BELGIUM IN WARTIME

THE DIARY OF A FRENCH ARMY CHAPLAIN. By Abbé Felix Klein. Translated from Le Guerre Vu d'une Ambulance by M. Harriet M. Capes. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25.

SIX WOMEN AND THE INVASION. By Gabrielle and Marguerite Yerta. With a preface by Mrs. Humphry Ward. The Macmillan Company. $2.

PAWNS OF WAR. A Play. By Rosworth Crocker. With foreword by John Galsworthy. Little, Brown & Co. $1.25.

THE account of the war as it shows itself in the dreadful havoc of wounded and dying, written by the French abbé of the American Hospital at Neuilly, Paris, is among the most touching and exquisite it has been our fortune to read. It is full of the simple stories told by the wounded themselves, and it reflects a courage, a faith, and above all a kind of superb resignation to the terrible demands of war that flowers from these Frenchmen and Frenchwomen in an unconscious burgeoning which leaves one dumb with wonder and admiration. It is but the first few months of the war that are touched on—from its beginning to the dawn of the new year, a year that was to bring, so the abbé hoped, "peace, not an unwieldy and menacing peace like that which for a long time past has held this war concealed within it, but a real and durable peace, firmly guaranteed by the agreement of the majority of the finest nations. * * *" That peace is still in the future, and the heroism and the devotion of those who fight for it continue. But read this book, and any doubt that France will hold out till it is won must disappear. She can endure all that must be endured.

Running through the tale of suffering and endurance, revealing itself in the words of the soldiers as well as in those of the priest, is the unaltered conviction that this thing must be fought out, "That this war shall be carried on to such a point that it will be the last." And another determination, that the enemy shall not bring them to his own level. When there is talk of reprisals the abbé exclaims:

> I know well that the present German atrocities pass all limits, and that they often assume a general and official character which peculiarly increases their import.
> But surely does not that alone prove the inferiority of our adversary?
> Far from us forever be the idea of giving ourselves up to so monstrous a rivalry.

It is a book filled with intimate, vivid pictures, with character sketches, with transcriptions from the mouths of the wounded, the dying, the cured, from those who lost all and those who have given all. In the telling the author also reveals himself to us. It is the revelation of a spirit sensitive and noble, borne up by unfailing faith, seeking the good even in things evil and finding it. One feels that this man must be greatly beloved by those who know him, and does not wonder that so many of the dying eyes into which he looked met his with a smile.

The chapters appeared as they were written from day to day in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and show the fluctuating hopes and fears of those early months, especially of the first days when the sudden onrush of war stunned all France. They are the more poignant because of this.

Another war book, "Six Women and the Invasion," is by two women, French women, two of those who lived in the invaded section of the country, and who, with their relatives, four other women, remained for fifteen months under the burden of the boche rule. The charm and gayety of this book are but additional proofs of the unconquerable spirit of the French nation. There are tears in it, rage in it, but always there is smiling courage, too.

A fine sarcasm shines through the whole story, and not a German of them all but stands pilloried in his shame, his beastliness, though the touch is as light as it is deadly sharp.

And the way she relates the privations. The single egg that must make a meal for the six of them, for instance.

Indomitable people!

Story after story, the pages are a constant play of changing scene, of curious adventures, escapes. At one moment the two younger girls, with their little 10-year-old boy cousin, are threatened by an officer with a pistol, merely for the pleasure of seeing them frightened; at another comes a notice: "Order to stop all clocks and timepieces in all houses." Mme. Yerta remarks: "Why? Who will ever pierce the mysteries of the German brain?"

Another order: "It is forbidden to allow all dogs and cats to go out." Comment on this: "It is said that every garden and field mouse danced three times in honor of the German Emperor."

There was a codicil to this order: "Forbidden to let the dogs bark."

It is the part of the book that tells of the concentration camp where the herded French were held on the journey to free France that makes one see red. Let the precious pacifists read that portion and then sit back smiling and say that the Germans must not be beaten. One can but wish each one of them safely in Jouville, under the invader's heel.

The last book is a play that dramatizes one family in invaded Belgium. It is swift of movement, told with a direct simplicity, and it ends with a touch of horror that is fit and proper for the tale it has to tell. One can imagine that it would hold an audience in breathless attention, that it would play well in one of those smaller theatres that are not afraid of tragic scenes. There is a word of preface by John Galsworthy.

But there is more drama in the actual occurrences of the two books that relate the personal experiences of their authors than can be conjured up by any imagination. The play in which Mr. Crocker shows us one little Belgian family, happy and quiet, symbol of thousands, whose happiness is turned to a hell of misery, is a work true to life—for we have beside it the actual transcriptions from life for proof and parallel—but that play is not more pointed, vivid, impressive than the stories told by the wounded soldiers or by the villagers. Four years ago we might have shuddered at the play. Now we read it only to think that reality is more terrible than this. But the proof that "Pawns of War" is good is that it might easily have been one of those stories that the living or the dying have told as the record of what they have seen and suffered.

OVER PERISCOPE POND

OVER PERISCOPE POND: Letters from Two American Girls in Paris, October, 1916-January, 1918. By Esther Sayles Root and Marjorie Crocker. With illustrations. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.50.

SOME of the best books on the war were not written for publication. "Over Periscope Pond" is a collection of "letters home," written by two young Americans engaged in relief work with the Rev. and Mrs. Ernest W. Shurtleff in Paris. When it was suggested that the letters would have value as a book, the writers hesitated for some time before they consented to their publication. Indeed, the book has much in it that is altogether personal—chattings of friends met here and there, comments on happenings which in themselves have no direct interest to the public at large. Yet even these little things, woven into the fabric of the book's experience, have their important place. "Over Periscope Pond" is a revelation of the life—the work and the play, the knowledge, the occasional danger, the camaraderies—of two healthy, interested, intelligent young American girls who worked hard to help the victims of the war, but who never lost their normal balance of living. It is an excellent book throughout; and it is indeed unique.

Miss Root is a New York girl and Miss Crocker is from Boston. Each offered her services to Dr. and Mrs. Shurtleff, and—one in the Autumn of 1916, the other a little later—went to France. Paris was itself new to them both, and all the conditions of relief work were amazingly unprecedented.

The charm and the unusual interest of "Over Periscope Pond" do not lie alone, or even chiefly, in the fact that the record is personal; they are rather in the kind of personality shown. Both these Americans have their eyes open—and their hearts open, too. They are interested in everything that happens. They describe things, places, events, people, in the brightest and gayest way. They feel the sadness and pain all about them with a real sympathy—as when Miss Root says that they never use the word "blind" in speaking to those whom the war has made sightless, but always refer to them as the "wounded." Their high spirits have in them nothing callous—but precisely the reverse. For their very gayety is either a part of their quick responsiveness, or, as when they watch the Zeppelin raids in which they are themselves in danger, the expression of an instinctive courage. They are so wholesome, so quick, so able. It is no foolish national boasting to say that the spirit of such letters as these is indeed American; but it is something to be proud of.

Public Employes

A book by Lewis Meriam entitled "Principles Governing the Retirement of Public Employes" is issued as one of the publications of the Institute for Government Research. "A unique and joyful war book."

BY

MARJORIE CROCKER AND ESTHER SAYLES ROOT

"TWO American girls under fire, and the gallant, laughing feminine pluck of them—that is the splendidly sharp picture which illumines the pages of 'Over Periscope Pond,' one of the simplest, most human, most genuine of the war books. It is a collection of the 'letters home' of Miss Esther Sayles Root of New York and Miss Marjorie Crocker of Boston—letters written without thought of publication and therefore with a most charming freshness, fulness and spontaneity. We all know girls like 'Rootie' and 'Marje,' the authors' nicknames—self-reliant, attractive, pleasantly flippant young persons. And we must be glad to know that in their fields of patriotic service, in the hospitals, the canteens, the war relief stations, these girls are serving as loyally, courageously and efficiently as their brothers in khaki."—New York Evening World.

MR. W. B. YEATS in his "Per Amica Silentia Lunae" asks:

> What portion in the world can the artist have
> Who has awakened from the common dream
> But dissipation and despair?

And here is where one finds the poet of "The Countess Cathleen" and "The Land of Heart's Desire." With the passing of his youthful years, which he confesses, there have fallen from his shoulders, like a wornout cloak, many of the old affectations, the aesthetic poses more or less sincere, and only the early obsession of spiritism and cosmic mysticism remain to confuse him. He admits the interior struggle of the forces of his being, compares his poet state with that of sainthood, greatly to the advantage of the latter, shows the inconsistency between the ideal visions and the personal conduct of such a poet as Dante Alighieri, and arrives at quoting the lovely version Arthur Symonds has made of "The Night" of Juan de la Cruz.

These are old words of old men, written apparently at the end of Mr. Yeats's chapter. He has been gravely affected by the younger poets of France, as he shows in his epilogue. Are readers to have a new Crashaw in Mr. Yeats?

Ten or twelve rather irrepressible youngsters have combined in order to produce a volume or two called "Wheels, an Anthology of Verse"; and so they have come, without other reason, to be considered a group, a tendency or a school, in spite of want of resemblances in a common purpose or achievement. Some of them, moreover, are good and some are bad poets. The critic particularly likes the contributions of Edith Sitwell in the first series, and finds the contributions of Osbert and Sacheverell Sitwell rather banal and out of key. The pages devoted to Miss Iris Tree are not without marks of good writing, and Miss Nancy Cunard's departments also acknowledge occasional visits of the Muse.

Of Aldous Huxley and his amusing "Siesta Thoughts" and "Farewell to the Muses," one may only say that they would be creditable to the average newspaper humorous column. They are certainly a fifth wheel of this rather top-heavy omnibus of verse. "The Three Poems," from the French prose of Jean Arthur Rimbaud, are very well translated. It would be, indeed, a lesson in poetical futility for Mr. Ezra Pound and his followers if a complete edition of these Rimbaud vagaries could, as he suggests, be published in English, as it is altogether too great a pity to leave them exclusively to the logical minds of the French.

A very strong constructive sense in the work of Lieutenant Jack Turner, M. C., of the Canadian expeditionary force, saves his book, "Buddy's Blighty and Other Verses," from the ordinary fate of rough-and-ready writings. For "Buddy's Blighty," the title poem, is a splendid example of genuine emotion, noble experience, and clear observation, which in a way seems autobiographical. The delirium of the wounded Buddy is really a piece of the best kind of writing. While the other poems of the volume are hardly equal to the first, they are all worth while as war verse and will please the general reader with their pronounced realistic experience.

The stanza in Gervé Baronti's "In the Red Years":

> Sweet white rose sprinkled with the dew,
> How well you play your part!
> For who would dream on seeing you
> That canker eats your heart is about the best and most characteristic bit of verse in a collection half-rationalist, half-aesthetic, and if another half be permitted, half-inept. There is a limitation of thought, a lack of development of fancy, an absence in the figures of any life; and they denote a writer out of place among the poets.

Very much the same qualities characterize Mr. Baronti's little play "A Modern Phenix," a rehearsal of empty voices, without the emphasis of plastic quality that makes for dramatic presentation.

In "The Divine Image," of Caroline Giltinan, there occurs a remarkable stanza, that contrasts strangely in a way with her title, the general Catholic purport, and the dedication of her volume. Yet for all that, it seems one of the actual personal notes of her lyre and as such is a revelation of her power. It is:

HIS WOMAN.

> In the pale, murmuring dawn she lay
> Alone, with nothing more to lose.
> Her eyes one soft white arm espied
> And lips too tired to voice her pride
> Caressed and kissed a bruise.

Another stanza makes in a way a powerful companion piece. With the black contrast of a satyr's hoof-print in a convent garden:

MATED.

> At last I see him undisguised—
> Unkind, unclean, uncouth—
> Deceiving dream, come back and hide
> The terror of the truth.

"Wisconsin Sonnets" is the name of a small collection by Charles H. Winke. They are simple, unaffected poems, sometimes, indeed, a little uncomfortable in their pure Petrarchan mold, but yet direct and clear in expression and emotion. It seems strange that the Rev. James B. Dollard in The Toronto Globe, pointing out the beauty of "The Lighted Pane," should not have also noted the very inspiring sonnet entitled "Landscape."

It is one of the frequent difficulties of the reviewer that verse which is so good as that of "Star Drift," by Brian Padraic O'Seasnain, should not be more effective. Mr. O'Seasnain releases himself to the beauty of nature and of revolutionary Ireland with a touch of cosmic philosophy, yet one finds neither breadth nor depth nor any great height in all his book. One feels that this author is a personality that has not quite done itself justice in these poems.

One is also told that "this terrific book" of Mr. Benjamin De Casseres, "The Shadow Eater," "links its author in his infinite daring and implacable Nay before Life, with Heraclitus, Schopenhauer, Leopardi, Flaubert, Amiel, Jules Laforgue, Baudelaire, Poe, and—Buddha," but while the reader must be rather impressed, particularly by the last name, the absence of any constructive sense in the author's mind leaves one unafraid and rather indifferent before all this empty rumpus. It may be said of Mr. De Casseres that, as a materialist bounding his world in the here and now, his philosophy, with all its suicidal quality, has better basis than a great many of the platitudinous, sweet, foundationless codes of thought that are preached by many writers whose digestions are very likely better than that of the author of "The Shadow Eater."

Mr. Wallace Gould in his foreword to his "Children of the Sun" asks the reader not to call his rhapsodies poems. There is little danger of this, for a more perverse and scatter-brained volume has rarely come from the press. There is, however, poetry in some of the shorter pieces of the collection, a poetry, indeed, of the cosmic, goatish variety that seems to reveal what the author would seem to have a passion for revealing, with an intensity that may be called rhapsodic for want of a better physiological word.

"The Children of the Sun" is a strange mixture of reverence and lawlessness such as mark the decadence of many of the New Englander radicals of today. Mr. Gould is a real poet, more or less than sane in his methods, and his dithyrambs make interesting if not always profitable reading.

Mr. Sylvester Baxter in his foreword to the volume, "The Unseen House and Other Poems," is good enough to give us his theories in regard to free-verse forms, in which he makes the obvious distinction between poetry in general and the so-called poems that some of the benighted may still believe to be its only exemplification. Mr. Baxter has formally adopted the system of dropping the capital letters from the beginnings of his lines which are not the beginnings of a sentence, in this following the example not only of the Spanish and Italian poets, but of a good many of the writers of the Yellow Book period of poetry of some twenty or thirty years ago. This, however, is a question that primarily concerns the editors of Printers' Ink.

Explanations, always lacking somewhat in value, are dangerous when they accompany a book of verses which should in fact be its own reason and explanation. "The Unseen House" proves a rather matter of fact statement of the sorrow that a beautiful building on the banks of the Charles at Watertown—the Perkins Institute for the Blind—cannot be seen by its destined inmates. Two other poems, "At the Public Bath" and "Recruits," are a glorification of male beauty unadorned. Nevertheless, there is in "The Unseen House" the note of the pracher rather than the poet. Very little élan rewards the reader, led on by an excellent technique and the promise, unfulfilled, that something in the way of a confession or explosion is about to occur in its pages.

In "Hill Tracks" the author, Mr. Wilfrid Wilson Gibson, reveals a close study of nature in her obvious moods, a sense of old romance in its survival in the peasant life of Northumberland, and a plenteous knowledge of the curious and pleasing names of hills and dales and towns in Northern England. This is all that one can say for these "Hill Tracks," except to remark that they are rendered in exceptional good verse-forms. One misses the lift and purpose of real poetry; there is no reach to the thoughts evoked, which, indeed, are few enough. It is a book devised on a sort of Bertillon system, in which the peasant thumbmarks are marked in an orderly but altogether poetical manner; the arrangement is statistical without the overtones of real life, such as may be detected in pure folk-lore, which, no doubt, Mr. Gibson is striving to reproduce.

"DESIRE"

The New York Times Review of Books:

There is a new book of poems called "Desire" by Charlotte Eaton, which I believe to be worthy of your notice. I thoroughly understand the skeptical attitude that such a dignified paper as THE NEW YORK TIMES maintains toward new and popular poetry, for most of this poetry is superficial and badly constructed. But "Desire" is one of the few exceptions to the rule. It is strong and comprehensive in style and deep in thought. Some of the poems—or free verse—are like Walt Whitman's, while in "Meditation" one is reminded of the "East India Love Lyrics" by Laurence Hope. There is a sensuous beauty in them, something warm and palpitating, something that touches the heart, in its own unique way. It is a sad as well as a stupid thing that any book worth while should be lost to the reading public because the author is unknown or because the book is thoughtlessly classed with a maudlin set of superficial writers, who make themselves targets for ridicule.

Charlotte Eaton is a philosopher in verse. Every thoughtful reader will find something beautiful and inspiring in her work.

One of these poems, "The Voluptuary," is a masterful study of the primitive man, proving that the annihilation of soul is a crime and something that cannot be hidden. Emerson says, "The face is dyed by the soul." When the soul is gone the features are meaningless or actually repellent.

I believe that I am not alone in thinking that Charlotte Eaton's work should live; that she is one of the coming young writers of our country.

WINGS IN THE NIGHT

WINGS IN THE NIGHT. By Alice Duer Miller. The Century Company.

The Chinese Court records its poetry in golden characters upon separate, delicate, handbreadths of lacquer. There is something of this fastidious awe in Alice Duer Miller's first volume of collected verse, much of which we have already read and remembered in current magazines. Mrs. Miller generally approaches her theme as though it were quite apart from herself, something discerned and understood which has moved her to song, rather than an attempt to reflect her own outline in the pools of experience. Mrs. Miller finds the same felicity of phrase for verse that we are accustomed to in her prose, she prepares for us enjoyment of delightful things small and great, only once does she suggest Athené armed in her "Answer to a Certain Gentleman," who must have been left wishing he hadn't.

There are two war poems, a fine appreciation of France, and a strong vignette on contrast called "In a School Chapel."

Social Progress

A book by William C. White and Louis J. Heath entitled "A New Basis for Social Progress" makes suggestions for educational and social administration that will interest social workers and educators. The suggestions grow out of the author's experience in the Pittsburgh Survey, and their main feature is a proposal that cities be divided into "homogeneous population units," for the handling of all educational and social problems. (Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.)

The Hun couldn't hold this Chicago boy.

From 8,000 feet in the air he had swirled down into their camp, wounded, helpless. They thought him dead—but they little knew the indomitable soul that lived in this Irish American—the soul that laughed at things that would have killed another man.

Their train was rushing him to the prison camp at 35 miles an hour. He was wounded, shaky, sick. The German guard sat beside him with gun loaded and ready to shoot. And from this he escaped.

It was 72 days before he was safe—72 days of crawling and slipping by night and hiding by day—bleeding, wounded—passing sentries boldly—fighting peasants—winding up in that dramatic crossing of the barbed wire fence that Germany considers so sure a boundary line.

Get his book at your bookseller's. It is a great story of that indomitable spirit that makes America unconquerable, invincible.

to accept the thought of the marriage—though, since she believes in individual choice and freedom, she never actively opposes it.

These two, Vincent Farron, Adelaide's father who is a charming Lanley of New York, and Pete Wayne himself, are all vividly and humanly drawn, as is the immature, but sweet and promising little Mathilde. The story is worked out delightfully, as a story; and through it all is the sharp interest of the contrasting types of women, the way they meet each other, the way they meet men, the way they meet life.

SHOT WITH CRIMSON

SHOT WITH CRIMSON. By George Barr McCutcheon. With illustrations by F. R. Gruber. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.

A PARTY of merry friends was dining late at a smart country club on the Jersey side of the river when the explosion at the Reynolds Munition Works shook all New York City and the country for miles around. The country club was near the factory, though not near enough to be endangered by the explosion; of course the terrible happening makes talk of anything else impossible; every one at the club expresses horror, guesses that the explosion is the work of German agents, and cries out against such outrages. Yet there begins to grow in the reader's mind the slow suspicion that some members of that little group of friends know more about the explosion than they ought to know; and the suspicion speedily becomes certainty.

"Shot with Crimson" is not, however, merely a story of one explosion in one munition factory. It is a story of German machinations in the United States. It is a story of treachery, of clever scheming, of the careful, and, to a great extent, the successful, covering up of tracks. It is a story of the work of our own Secret Service, too, which foils the enemy's plots more than once. But—sometimes successful, sometimes defeated—the work of the enemy goes on. At the end of the story, though one German agent has been discovered and rendered powerless to do any more harm, the strongest one of them all, with a company of associates, is still going on with his work.

It goes without saying that "Shot with Crimson" is a thrillingly interesting story. It goes without saying, too, that it calls our attention in sufficiently plain words to the dangers of spies and enemy agents in time of war—here and everywhere. But it stresses, in its exciting fiction form, two points which are good for the public here to remember and take to heart. One—which is merely referred to—is the simple fact that a man is not necessarily disloyal to America because he is of German birth and affiliations. The other is the equally simple, but by the general public often neglected, fact that when a man is a spy he does not advertise the fact that open sympathizers with Germany are not the people we have really to fear. The most interesting point emphasized in "Shot with Crimson" is not the existence of spies in this country; it is that the woman who is one of the ablest spies in the story is the head of a war relief society, the friend of men high up in Government office, a woman well known for her "patriotism," the wife of a man against whom no shadow of suspicion is or can ever be brought; the other German agents are equally in good standing. Here is no refusal to stand up when the National Anthem is played, no flaunting of the Kaiser's picture in the face of outraged Americans; here is secret, unscrupulous, clever work done for Germany against America.

A CLUBMAN'S ROMANCE

THE GIRL IN HIS HOUSE. By Harold MacGrath. With illustrations by Howard Giles. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

THIS is a gay story of mystery that has nothing to do with the war. It is, indeed, the sort of story that might have been written in the far-off days of four years ago. It is a story of New York, of a clubman who loses his fortune and wins it again, of a girl who never saw the father she adored, of mystery on Seventy-second Street.

Jimmie Armitage, worth half a million or so, is just, as he later calls himself, a "grasshopper." He does nothing whatever, good or bad. He is amiable, harmless, likable, worthless. Then the woman he thinks he loves jilts him for a richer man and off he goes to the Himalayas in a fit of peevishness. The story begins with his return, after six years of really wonderful life in wild lands—six years that have, though he doesn't know it, made a real man of the grasshopper.

He has need of being a real man when he gets back home. For he finds that his trusted agent has absconded with what at first appears to be all, but later turns out to be only half, of his fortune. Jimmie's income is cut in half. But the worst thing that has happened to him is that the agent has sold his house, his old home, with its art treasures and its rare associations and its many beautiful things, to a man who, having bought it and paid for it in good faith, can scarcely in decency be ousted. Moreover, it is all Jimmie's own fault, for he had given the agent complete power of attorney over all his belongings, to save himself trouble.

Now the man who has bought the Seventy-second Street house never appears; he is, it seems, an explorer, an archaeologist, who has spent most of his life in wandering over the world, and who now writes to his daughter from Yucatan. The daughter lives alone with the servants in the big old house. She is very young, very unusual, very lovely. And about her, too, there is a mystery.

"The Girl in His House," is an entertaining and romantic bit of improbability, a well-told story with a plot within a plot.

FIRST THE BLADE

FIRST THE BLADE. By Clemence Dane. The Macmillan Company. $1.50 net.

It is a pity that Miss Dane should have handicapped her delicate "Comedy of Growth," first by the cumbersome introduction, and then by her occasional buttonholing of the reader. This latter is not, under any circumstances, a commendable habit, but to be buttonholed and reminded that after all these people in whom you are becoming interested are merely creatures of the author's imagination is more than a little irritating. Laura, for instance, would be a really charming heroine if her creator would but let her alone. The picture of her as a child, passionately longing for the mother who had been everything in the world to her, is pathetic and appealing, and her love for the selfish, stodgy Justin, who looks upon her as a convenient person to have around, is well and skillfully portrayed.

The story is of the very slightest and is spun out to an inordinate length; but it is clever and the characters are all deftly shaped and handled. The scene is laid in an English village, Brackenhurst, in Kent, and the interest centres about Laura Valentine, who grew, and Justin Cloud, who in the late twenties was still only a boy, and is just beginning to develop under the stress of the war, when the book closes. Their relation to each other, her ardent love and his tolerant affection, is well developed; he wasn't really worth sacrificing anything for, much less renouncing, as Laura did, a possibly brilliant future. He is, however, a very human sort of person, with his blundering kindness and absolute lack of perception, and the sense of a half pathetic, half ironic comedy of human relationships is admirably sustained all through the book. The minor characters are deftly sketched and some of the descriptions are gracefully written.

STEALTHY TERROR

STEALTHY TERROR. By John Ferguson. With frontispiece. John Lane Company. $1.40 net.

A few months before the coming of the great war Hugh Abercromby, a medical student, was living peacefully in Berlin. During his various wanderings about the city he came across a certain café, called the Café Rosencrantz, which had "a character of its own, a queer, subtle flavor." This café interested him, and he went there quite often. For some time nothing at all startling happened; but on arriving there one night he became instantly conscious that something strange, even sinister, was afoot. And before the next night ended he was a fugitive, possessed of a mysterious packet intrusted to him by a man too near death to be able to speak, and aware that at least three enemies and probably more were seeking him, resolved to take the packet, even though they had to take his life as well.

The beginning of the story is well done, some of the incidents are neatly contrived, and the book as a whole is entertaining. But Hugh Abercromby's opinion as to the significance of the packet when at last he opens it is too foolish to be acceptable in view of what has gone before. The stupidity of the War Office, however, knowing as we now do of the determined way in which the nations shut their eyes to the German menace, is not incredible.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

J. H. GOODMAN.—Will you give a brief sketch of the artist who signed "Pine" on all the household copies of the oil painting of George Washington? It appears that Washington sat for a painting at Mount Vernon by this artist, who was there for three weeks, and the first painting was rejected, the rejected painting of which replicas were made and sold by Pine to any one for $100. He used to call the rejected painting his hundred-dollar bill.

Robert Edge Pine, painter, was born in London in 1730, and died of apoplexy at Philadelphia on Nov. 18, 1788. He was the son of John Pine, the engraver, who probably gave him his first lessons in art. Among his paintings was "Canute Rebuking His Courtiers on the Seashore." In 1783 Pine came to America, and settled with his wife and children in Philadelphia, where he kept a drawing school. He painted Francis Hopkinson, George Washington and his family, Robert Morris, George Read, Thomas Stone, and others. His widow disposed of his pictures by lottery. A large selection of his historical works were preserved in the Columbian Museum in Boston. They all perished when that institution was burned.

Kipling's Stories

M. E. T.—I have a number of the paper-covered editions of Kipling's stories which were printed in India many years ago. Can you tell me if they have any value?

The paper-covered editions of Kipling's stories, published by Wheeler & Co., at Allahabad, India, in 1888, command good prices. At auction "Soldiers Three" brings from $11 to $48, "The Story of the Gadsbys" from $6 to $13, "In Black and White" from $5 to $21, "Under the Deodars," from $3.25 to $17, "The Phantom Rickshaw" from $7 to $12, and "Wee Willie Winkie and Other Child Poems" from $5.50 to $14.50.

Self-Interpreting Bible

G. F.—Can you tell the value of a copy of "The Self-Interpreting Bible," containing Old and New Testaments, by the late Rev. John Brown, minister of the Gospel at Haddington, Edition 2, two volumes, London, 1791?

It is worth about $3. John Brown was born in 1722 at Carpen, Perthshire. He died at Haddington in 1787. The "Self-Interpreting Bible" was published in 1778 at Edinburgh in two volumes. It acquired popularity and was read widely among the English-speaking nations. Robert Burns refers to it in his "Letter to James Tait of Glenconner."

Battle of Niagara

JAMES R. EWELL.—Will you tell me the name of the author of "The Battle of Niagara, A Poem Without Notes, and Golden; or the Maniac Harper," by John O'Cataract, published in New York in 1818?

"John O'Cataract" was one of the pen-names of John Neal, who was born at Falmouth, (now Portland,) Maine, in 1793, and died in 1876. He was prolific, and for nearly half a century was prominent in journalistic life in America. "The Battle of Niagara," about which our correspondent inquires, was his first volume of poems. The first edition appeared in 1818, and the second edition in 1819. Neal also wrote a number of novels, which, however, are out of print.

"Half a Loaf"

JULIA LOGAN ARCHIBALD.—Can you tell me in what magazine appeared a short story entitled "Half a Loaf"?

"Half a Loaf," by William Holloway, was printed in Everybody's Magazine for September, 1911.

Dates of Books

C. LAMAR MORRIS.—Can you tell me in what period the following books were written—Dickens's "Christmas Carol," Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," (The Lilliputians and Brobdingnags,) Franklin's "Autobiography," and Irving's "Sketch Book."

Dickens's "Christmas Carol" was first published in 1843; Swift's "Gulliver's Travels" in 1726; Franklin's "Autobiography" in 1791, and Irving's "Sketch Book" in 1819.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

JESSIE M. PARSONS.—In THE BOOK REVIEW, issue of April 21, there is a query regarding the prophecy of Brother Johannes. The prophecy may be found in "Paris Waits 1915," by Mrs. M. E. Clarke, (Putnam's, $1.25.)

We are also informed that the prophecy of Brother Johannes is discussed, with others, in "The War and the Prophets," by Herbert Thurston, S. J., which is published by R. J. Kenedy & Sons, New York. It was also published in the Paris Figaro on Sept. 17, 1914, and was subsequently quoted in The Evening Post. The prophecy is also noted in a book entitled "The End of the Age," by the Rev. Glenn Andrews Kratzer of Chicago.

Information in regard to this matter was also received from Miss Edena S. Schooley, East Orange, N. J.; A. B. Mulcahy, New York; Leland Goben, Scranton, Penn., and Katharine Kissam Johnson, Maplewood, N. J.

"Peculiar"

M. J. COLLINS.—In answer to the request of "I. M. V. R." in your issue of Feb. 24, would say that the name of the novel desired is probably "Peculiar," by Egan Sargent. "Peculiar Institution" was the name of an educated negro who figures largely in the story. The child was kidnapped when a Mississippi River boat caught fire, her skin stained, and then she was sold as a slave to a man named Rattcliffe. He discovered she was white and had her educated, but with no good motive. When she grew up she called herself "Perdita." The real hero of the story is a white man named "Vance." The novel was written about the time of the civil war. It was published by the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company of Boston, from whom a copy may be obtained.

The Real Love

P. H.—In response to "Edgar Farr" in the Feb. 3 issue, would say that I can supply the poem for which he asks, but know neither title nor author. It is as follows:

Thou art not my first love,
I loved before we met;
The memory of the happy past
Lingers round me yet.
But thou art my last love,
The truest and the best;
The rose but shed its "outer leaves,
I give thee all the rest."

Miss May C. Pickens writes that the title of the poem is "The Real Love," and it is printed in a book entitled "Good Fellowship."

Sundial Inscription

MARGARET L. SMITH.—The following is an inscription found on a quaint sundial:

Hours fly; flowers die;
New days, new ways
Pass by. Love stays.

"Sleeps in the Rock"

MARY P. BASSETT.—In reply to the query of "M. F." printed in THE BOOK REVIEW of Feb. 3, regarding the quotation, "He Sleeps in the Rock," would say that the correct quotation is as follows:

Mind sleeps in the vegetable, dreams in the animal, and wakes in man.

This is quoted by Professor Benjamin Rand in his book, "Modern Classical Philosophers," as coming from the Greeks. Am sorry this information is not more definite.

APPEALS TO READERS

M. A. U.—Will some reader tell who is the author of the following lines, and from what poem they are taken?

Breast of the great earth mother, here we lean,
With no conventions hard to intervene;
Content with the contentment nature brings
Just to be out of doors.

A Boat Song

A. H. D. ALTREE.—Will some reader indicate the title and authorship of the poem from which the following is an excerpt? I have heard that the title is "A Canadian Boat Song."

Listen to me, as when ye heard our father
Sing long ago the song of other shores;
Listen to me, and then in chorus gather
All your deep voices as ye pull your oars.

Winding Way

G. N.—Will some reader give me the source of the following?

I see them on their winding way;
About their ranks the moonbeams play.

"HEY, TOM!"

DO you remember when Tom Sawyer went swimming and had everything hidden so carefully so that Aunt Polly couldn't find out?—

Aunt Polly had sewed up his shirt that morning—

But Tom had carefully re-sewed it, so he thought he was safe. But alack and alas! he used black thread instead of white.

Once more you will laugh with Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn—but you will want to cry as you laugh. For behind the joy of youth is the reality of life—the philosophy you did not see when you were a boy.

MARK TWAIN

While he lived, we loved him. He made us laugh, so that we had not time to see that his style was sublime, that he was biblical in simplicity, that he was to America another Lincoln in spirit.

We watched for his great white head in the crowds—we hung on his every word—we smiled, ready to laugh at his least word. But now he is gone—we love him—yes, —he's still the familiar friend—but he has joined the immortals. More than Whitman—than Longfellow—than Poe or Hawthorne or Irving—he stands for America—with the great of the earth—the Homer of this new land—a prince of men—a king among dreamers—a child among children.

The Great American

He was an American. He had the idealism of America—the humor, the kindliness, the reaching toward a bigger thing, the simplicity. Born poor—growing up in a shabby little town on the Mississippi—a pilot—a seeker for gold—a printer—Mark Twain was molded on the frontier of America. The vastness of the West—the fearlessness of the pioneer—the clear philosophy of the country boy were his—and they stayed with him to the last. Of those glorious later days —when Emperors and Kings—Chinese Mandarin and plain American, all alike, wept for him. In his work we find all things, from the ridiculous in "Huckleberry Finn" to the sublime of "Joan of Arc"—the most spiritual book that was ever written in the English language, of serene and lovely beauty, as lofty as Joan herself. A man who could write two such books as "Huckleberry Finn" and "Joan of Arc" was sublime in power. His youth and his laughter are eternal; his genius will never die.

Low Price Sale Must Stop

25 VOLUMES—NOVELS—BOYS' STORIES—HUMOR—ESSAYS—TRAVEL—HISTORY

Mark Twain wanted everyone in America to own a set of his books. So one of the last things he asked was that we make a set at so low a price that everyone might own it. He said: "Don't make fine editions. Don't make editions to sell for $200 and $300 and $1,000. Make good books, books good to look at and easy to read, and make their price low." So we have made this set. And up to now we have been able to sell it at this low price. Rising costs make it impossible to continue the sale of Mark Twain at a low price. New editions will cost very much more than this Author's National Edition. A few months ago we had to raise the price a little. That raise in price was a very small one. It does not matter much if you missed it. But now the price must go up again. You must act at once. You must sign and mail the coupon now. If you want a set at a popular price, do not delay. This edition will soon be withdrawn, and then you will pay considerably more for your Mark Twain.

The last of the edition is in sight. There will never again be a set of Mark Twain at the present price. Now is your opportunity to save money. Now is the time to send the coupon to get your Mark Twain.

RESCUE FOR RUSSIA

Allied Military Movement Proposed by Slavs in America —Expedition for Friendly Help, Not for Conquest

By LIEUTENANT BORIS BRASOL
of the Russian Guard

This article was read by the author recently to about a hundred representative patriotic Russians in New York. After discussion it was decided that Lieutenant Brasol had accurately reflected the sentiments of those present at the meeting, which was held in the Hotel Savoy.

THE errors of a great nation happen fatally to be great errors. The Russian revolution, born in the terrible time of a war of nations, began with a great error, with the favor Order No. 1, abolishing discipline in the army, destroying the popular conception of the respect due to military rank, substituting for ideas of military honor and duty the empty watchword of "democratization of the army."

Following this order, like its dark shadow, came the rapid and inevitable dissolution of the army—the dissolution of the military power of Russia. Shoulderstraps were torn from the Russian officers; first in the navy and then in the army began a wholesale murder of officers accompanied by tortures elsewhere unknown in history.

With the fall of discipline began a complete desertion of soldiers, a formless-gray flight of regiments of soldiers from the front "homeward." Those soldiers who for one reason or another remained in the trenches became the objects of systematic attacks from German agitators and ultra-socialists. For long months the inoculation of the poisonous theories of pacifism continued in the ranks of the Russian troops. The old war banners, the banners covered with the glory of centuries of warfare, were cast aside, and in their stead were unfurled the black-rod flags of anarchy, on which the Russian soldiers unfortunately did not notice the symbolical figure of the Prussian eagle.

The disorganization of the army, of course, was not confined to certain individual portions. Very rapidly the higher ranks, from the army staff to the supreme commanders, found themselves under the menace of the councils of soldiers' deputies. The splendid army commanders, Brusiloff, Korniloff, and Alexeieff, appeared unfit in the eyes of the mass of the soldiery. Their sober voices, pronouncing at the Moscow conference terrible prophecies of the inevitable downfall of Russia if discipline were not restored in the army, were drowned by the rattle-trap oratory of Bolshevist leaders, who really wished to make and succeeded in making of "great Russia" only a "great discord." The splendid commanders of the Russian Army first fell under suspicion and then were accused of treason, and by those who themselves stood upon that indefinable boundary line where a Lenine ends and a German spy begins.

Thus the derangement of the military power of Russia went on wider and deeper. In the Autumn of 1917 it became evident that it was impossible for Russia further to struggle against the Central Powers. But the power of resistance of the Russian Army and Navy was not lost through the influence of external military operations. It was lost as the result of an internal gangrenous process, destroying the very soul and heart in the ranks of the soldiers and delivering the army over to the control of the apostles of demagogy.

The German military leaders attentively followed the process of internal decay and disintegration of the Russian Army, and at the moment when that process had reached its culminating point the Germans, in full accord with the Bolsheviki, staged the Brest-Litovsk conference and concluded a "peace" which delivered Russia into their sovereign power for decades in advance. Independently of this and simultaneously with the signing of the treaty of peace, unanimously indorsed by the Councils of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates at the Moscow assembly, the Germans advanced upon the entire eastern front, and within the short time had occupied the entire Baltic region, the southwestern portion of Finland, the Dnieper basin, and almost all of New Russia, with Odessa and Kherson.

Thus died the Russian Army, thus perished the military power of Russia.

The wrecking of the Russian military power must naturally react in the most hurtful manner upon the strategic position of the Entente Powers, especially as it loosened the blockade which for two and a half years had encircled the Central Powers with an iron ring.

At the same time the capture of the Black Sea by the Germans is pregnant with results of historical significance. First of all, Germany will be in position to secure an uninterrupted interior waterway between Hamburg and Batum. Besides the immense strategical importance, this route will have the greatest commercial significance for the Central Powers. It is sufficient to recall the fact that owing to the establishment of this route the industrial region of Hamburg will be enabled to utilize the petroleum of Batum, and at the same time the wheat of Southern Russia can be shipped by water to the ports of Northern Ger-in Russia—and first of all the intellectual classes—were terrorized into silence; mute witnesses of the wrecking of all that was most sacred that formed the essence of power and glory through a thousand years of Russian history. All enough to cast off the domination of the Lenines and Trotzkys.

The allied powers, therefore, must keep in view the fact that the fight against Bolshevism in all of its manifestations is part of the fight against Ge-the Ural Mountains; the standard of insurrection is borne by General Dutoff; in the southwest, in Bessarabia, the Red Guard forces are successfully being fought by one of the heroes of the vic-

PERIL OF DRIFT TO RADICALISM

William H. Barr Sees Socialistic Trend and Tendency of Governmental Truckling to Labor Unions in the Midst of War Crisis

By GEORGE MacADAM.

TO put it bluntly, Do we want socialism? I am not suggesting a question for academic discussion; the current of events, now so swift moving, has carried us far beyond that. Today socialism looms before us as an actuality toward which we are rapidly being swept."

The question is put by William H. Barr, President of the National Founders' Association, one of the largest employers' associations in the United States, whose 600 members represent a capital of between one and two billions of dollars and employ approximately 350,000 men.

"And don't let us forget," continued Mr. Barr, "that it is not book socialism that is ahead of us, the socialism that is dreamed of by blind altruists who take into account only the appealing needs of humanity and shut their eyes to humanity's ugly defects. That form of government never has and never will exist outside of books, lectures, and parlor conversations. What we've got to face is practical socialism, the socialism of the street, the socialism that is being exhibited to us by the Bolsheviki of Russia.

"The vital problem for us is, Are we going to allow the tide to carry us, or, are we going to stem the tide?

"One of our gravest faults as a people is that of indifference toward matters that we do not believe are of immediate concern to us individually. We may be told of conditions which need to be remedied; we may even notice certain drifts in the body politic which we know to be dangerous—usurpation of power by small minorities, intrusion upon constitutional rights, a warping of our democratic form of Government. But we regard them with complaisance so long as we can say to ourselves that they will not affect us individually. And then we are surprised and alarmed when we find that a thing that we have ignored has developed into a nation-wide menace.

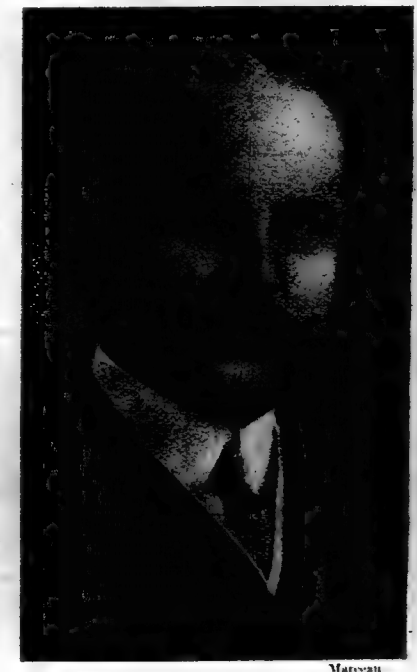
"Mention the Non-Partisan League, for instance, in any of the cities of the East and you arouse little interest. If there is any knowledge of this league at all, the chances are that it is regarded complaisantly as a free-and-easy experiment in Government that is being made in the free-and-easy West.

"The Non-Partisan League is a political party which is frankly communistic, frankly antagonistic to our national ideals. Its program is one of sabotage. Theoretically, it is for the purpose of improving the condition of the farmer; practically, it is an absolute attempt to undermine the Constitution of the United States. It calls for State or municipal operation of banks, mills, public utilities of every description, and specifically advocates conscription by the State of all profits and all personal incomes in excess of $10,000. The promise has been made to the farmers that, with financial institutions once under State operation, financial help without the formality of security in return will be extended for the development of farm properties.

"With this specious program, the Non-Partisan League was launched only a little more than a year ago in North Dakota by one A. C. Townley, a self-confessed Socialist who made a failure of farming. But in that brief space of time it has absolutely swept that State. It now controls everything but the vote of one State Senator whose term has not yet expired.

"And it now seems to be spreading with the same amazing rapidity through the other States of the Northwest, through South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, Montana, Oregon, and Washington. Its leaders are confidently predicting that it will sweep Montana at the next election as it swept North Dakota at the last election. In this campaign it is plainly allying itself with the I. W. W. and the worst type of German sympathizer. Townley, it should be recalled, has already been arrested for sedition; and in this crisis in the world's food supply the league's organizers are openly urging farmers to delay planting until the price of wheat is at $5 a bushel.

"The Bolsheviki of Russia have made the experiment of discounting by legislative fiat individual thrift, initiative and energy, and reducing all to a common level. And in consequence the world now has before it the sad spectacle of a country, naturally rich and prosperous, slowly dying of inanition. The Bolshevist program of the Non-Partisan League is beginning to have the same effect upon North Dakota. Already the blight of a rotten economic system is beginning to be felt there; business concerns that were prosperous a year ago are now anxious to sell out at 50 cents on the dollar.



Matzen

William H. Barr, President of the National Founders' Association.

"But the East seems totally oblivious of the fact that it is already being invaded by this communistic party. There are various farmers' movements whose programs sound strangely like an echo of North Dakota. The East has not yet taken the trouble to inquire who is back of these movements, but unless it awakes to the danger and takes steps to avert it, coming events will show that the Non-Partisan League has secured a firm hold upon the East.

"I have absolutely no quarrel with any honest movement on the part of the farmers to better their own condition, any movement which is in keeping with the principles and practices of a democracy. But I do warn against any farmers' movement which has a communistic program and which seeks to join forces with a labor movement which also has a communistic program.

"A few years ago the head of the American Federation of Labor had violent clashes with the Socialists, asserting that there could be no relationship between the labor unionist and the Socialist. But today a study of the situation indicates that the American Federation of Labor and its allied unions are not merely coquetting with socialism, but are in intimate friendship and relationship with it and are steadily working toward the accomplishment of many of its principles.

"Further, the labor unions are supporting every movement looking toward socialistic Government control of industry, a control that has been made possible by the great world war. I make no complaint of any control which is honestly a necessity in our present crucial situation. We must win the war, and everything else must be subordinated to that end. But let us see that the control is necessary, let us see that the control is not covertly designed so that it will overstay the necessities.

"If we review our industrial history we will see that the labor unions have always attempted to associate themselves with the political party which will do the most for them. Every effort has been made to convince the present Administration of the good-will of organized labor, labor feeling that it can get more from the Government as at present constituted than it can from great open-shop industries. Therefore, labor urges that all industry pass into the control of the Government, so that it may exercise through the Government a controlling force which will increase wages, decrease hours, and bring into effect all its self-centred demands.

"The attitude of organized labor in this war has been curious. The leaders recognized early in the struggle the necessity of maintaining popular approval, and they sought to influence public opinion by oratory and pronouncements. We have seen a well-designed propaganda cover organized labor with a mantle of patriotism, but this mantle has not served to veil strikes, agitation, slacking, and the kindred evils which make for lack of progress in the war.

"It is not to be forgotten that last November, after the nation had been at war for seven months and the urgent need of munitions and ships was well known, the American Federation of Labor at its annual convention in Buffalo reaffirmed its position against the prevention or interference with strikes by injunction proceedings, formally resolving that it 'be held as usurpation and disregarded, let the consequences be what they may.' Neither is it to be forgotten that through the months of national stress and strain that have since passed organized labor has consistently lived up to that official declaration of policy.

"What difference does it make if a committee of labor leaders assemble at Washington and proclaim in trumpet voices their patriotic ardor, if thousands of men, whom they are supposed to direct—workers in the shipyards, in the foundries, and factories—go out on strike, tie up shipping, stop production, and paralyze the Government in so far as they are able?

"The Government has failed to recognize the necessity of a clear and definite policy toward labor. We have had a series of compromises in different parts of the country, after great strikes, as the temporary means of solving this problem. We have seen Governmental support of the unions manifested very strongly, and as a direct result we have seen little done to bring about continuous work in the shipyards and munition plants. The power of the Government has not been exercised to prevent strikes for outrageous and uneconomic advances in pay, whereas the manufacturer who refused to turn out work for the Government without an increase in profit would probably find his factory commandeered.

"This war will be won in the workshops of the United States. Yet during the first year of our participation in the war at least ten million working days were lost by strikes for higher wages, shorter hours, recognition of the union, sympathetic strikes. Besides this, other millions of working days have been lost through deliberate slacking, through union restrictions, and through that form of sabotage which makes it possible for the workman with an alleged grievance to do six hours actual work in nine. What is the answer to the figures recently published, which show that a study of the work of certain union riveters in San Francisco revealed an average of fifty-one rivets a day, and the announcement from a Newark shipyard that a single riveter there drove in one day more than 1,300 rivets? How fast can we progress under such circumstances?

"I am not in favor of the conscription of labor. I am not in favor of driving men to the utmost of their strength. I believe in conserving the strength and energy of employes. But I insist that a fair day's work for a fair day's pay is not only decent patriotism in time of war, but it is also the gospel of honesty in time of peace. Only one solution of the whole problem seemed to appeal to the Government, and that was in every case where there was a strike to increase wages and with a recurring strike to increase wages again. These local applications had the effect of stimulating trouble at other places and were prolific of serious delay all along the line.

"The nation is now building its hopes for industrial peace on the recently created National War Labor Board. Both industry and labor were represented in the War Labor Conference Board out of whose deliberations the National War Labor Board grew. In recommending the creation of the latter board, the Conference Board drew up an agreement which was signed by the representatives of industry and of organized labor. This agreement had one great precept—maximum production during the war. To this end it provides for a virtual truce between capital and labor for the period of the war. It provides for the maintenance of the open shop where it exists and of the closed shop where that exists, but primarily it provides that all disputes shall be referred to the National War Labor Board.

"Since the declaration of this truce—for maximum production during the war—there have been many strikes. Thus far, only the power of public opinion has prevented them from spreading. But it was the political power of organized labor that recently caused the provision forbidding munitions strikes in wartime to be stricken from the Sabotage bill. There was nothing in this provision which could mean legal compulsion to work. Its enactment would only have meant that there would be no conspiracy not to work on Government work while the nation was in this life-and-death struggle. It was also the political power of organized labor that recently caused the passage in the House of the Naval Appropriation bill with its anti-efficiency rider.

"This anti-efficiency clause was forced into similar appropritation bills several years ago by organized labor, its purpose being to prevent the patriotic and expert worker from doing any more work or getting any greater pay, through premiums or bonuses, than the shiftless or mediocre worker. These provisions have been carried in the naval appropriation bills heretofore, but no one imagined that when we were actually at war organized labor would attempt to make the Government stultify itself by preaching production and practicing prohibition of efficiency. Organized labor in England has withdrawn, for the period of the war, its former objection to the bonus or open-shop methods of increasing production. But

raphy, consists primarily in hiding its game in two ways—to disguise what one has and to make believe what one has not. In virtue of the first principle the batteries will be masked under painted canvas and the observation posts under gathered foliage, &c. According to the second, a fake battery will be created, an artificial road, with stage accessories and decorations, simulating reality to the distant observer.

The great camoufleur Ludendorff is inspired by analogous rules; sometimes he will imagine a false victory; at other times he will hide a check under the mantle of a pretended strategic combination, by one of those trickeries of truth so dear to German mentality.

Cunning, tortuous, a forger and a liar, thus appears Ludendorff in the course of this special work.

But soon, by a bold innovation, Ludendorff gives to his bulletins a tone, a development, a breadth, and a peculiar importance. He does not limit himself to expose the military situation, he uses them as means of action on the opinion of the world, as well as that of the German people, to whom he sometimes addresses regular sermons from the height of the reverberating tribune of the bulletin. Thus in the month of April last, in an energetic appeal to striking workingmen in the munition factories, while exhorting them, in spite of the difficulties and hardships, to continue working without rest for the needs of the soldiers, Ludendorff exclaimed pathetically, "The question is, to be or not to be!" and invoked as witnesses the thousands of soldiers who had sacrificed themselves in silence.

In these bulletins, which we may call civic, Ludendorff finds one way to keep up the confidence of the German Nation. Considering that his functions have made him a sort of moral guardian, he takes it upon himself to revive souls and comfort hearts. At every moment, following the indications given by the General Staff, which are blindly obeyed, the whole German press preaches interior unity, "the maintenance of the victorious spirit inspired by Hindenburg," a theme constantly prompted by Ludendorff. On Oct. 26, 1916, he writes to Deputy Schiffer a letter which the latter communicates to the Reichstag: "We shall accomplish our enormous task if we feel behind us a united German people, full of faith and ceasing to divide itself in vain discussions." During especially critical moments of the interior life of the empire, all the newspapers were aligned as if on parade, and took up as a theme the necessity of confidence with these headlines: "Keep your head high. The struggle against hunger. Victory shall not betray us. Let us conserve our nerves. If necessary Germany will know how to die."

And the Lokal-Anzeiger writes, not without eloquence: "As we condemn strikes in the munition factories as sacrilegious, so must we condemn the strike of the souls which weakens us and enervates those on the firing line."

Thoroughly convinced that the longer the war lasts, the more it becomes a struggle of moral endurance and nervous resistance by the nations engaged, the German High Command employs and encourages all the means of propaganda to create an atmosphere of faith and union. Accordingly Hindenburg, in innumerable messages inspired by Ludendorff and addressed to German corporations, never ceases to affirm at every moment his ringing faith in final victory.

Last Summer, to keep up the morale in the ranks of the German Army, Ludendorff hit upon the creation of a corps of "wohlfahrts offizieren," literally welfare officers, whose duty was to answer queries of soldiers in the barracks of all kinds of military questions, to attract the attention of men to the newspapers favorable to a German Fatherland, and to convince the fighters of the necessity of war until it achieved the complete triumph of Germany. The propaganda was followed up, not only in the army in the interior, but likewise in the trenches, by a distribution of tracts, pamphlets, booklets, and posters proclaiming the superiority of a Hindenburg peace over a so-called peace of Scheidemann or Erzberger.

These manifestations were the object, at the stormy session of the Reichstag on Oct. 6, of a violent interpellation by Deputy Landsberg, who denounced the political intrusion in the army, citing many examples of clergymen, officials, and officers preaching in favor of a new party of the Fatherland, against the resolution voted by the Reichstag. The Prussian Minister of War, General von Stein, answered with great arrogance against the calumny which represented Hindenburg and Ludendorff as continuing the war out of personal interest; he admitted that the soldiers received "the necessary enlightenment, the army being hungry for spiritual nourishment." These strange declarations were greeted with ironical laughter by the members of the Left.

Being forced to busy themselves with the internal affairs of the nation, it is not surprising to see Hindenburg and Ludendorff playing at certain moments an active political rôle. Particularly in the great interior crisis of the month of March Ludendorff came out energetically against Bethmann Hollweg, reproaching him for his lack of firmness and his moderation in his military aims. It was Ludendorff's power which won out, and the National and Conservative Parties of the Reichstag, at a private meeting at the Hotel Adlon, under the Presidency of Count Westarp, sent to the Emperor the following message: "The undersigned demand the dismissal of Bethmann Hollweg; at General Headquarters only General Ludendorff is indispensable, for the favor and disfavor of the Emperor cannot touch him!"

One may perceive the place which Ludendorff holds in the estimation of these powerful parties when one remembers that even Bismarck was not considered out of reach of the imperial disfavor.

The military party incarnated by these two heads, Hindenburg-Ludendorff, has consolidated itself more than ever as a sovereign power. Ludendorff in particular, from the extraordinary activity which he displays in the military, moral, and political domain, has gathered growing influence until his fame has risen to that of Hindenburg himself. But while the old Field Marshal wrapped himself up in popular worship, it seems that the intellectual element of the nation appreciates Ludendorff more. At any rate, both enjoy the unlimited confidence of the public. The Kaiser expressed the great estimation in which he held Ludendorff the day he received the German poet Max Bewer, who wrote a description of William II. in the Lokal-Anzeiger, and added these words:

"Hindenburg is our Wotan, Ludendorff our Siegfried; and the whole of Germany must grow with them."

Then, on the occasion of the capture of Riga, the Emperor conferred upon the "Oberquartier Meister" the great cross of the Red Eagle with the oak leaves and the swords; a few weeks before, to celebrate the fourth year of the war, the Sultan had sent to Ludendorff the order of Osmanié of the first class with diamonds and swords.

On his part, Hindenburg, with real or feigned modesty, renders homage to the worth of his faithful aid. On Oct. 2 last, during an intimate ceremony at General Headquarters to celebrate the seventieth anniversary of the Field Marshal, the latter, in a speech, in the presence of the Emperor, extolled the eminent qualities of Ludendorff, attributing to him the greater part of the merit. According to certain neutrals, "this big German trooper is only a puppet in the hands of the Chief of Staff"—which may be an exaggeration. But in this association Ludendorff is the brain, Hindenburg the arm; one conceives the plans, the other realizes them; one represents the young and active element, the fertile spirit with "ideas," the other the will to execute, the mass which gives weight to the common decisions, mostly inspired by Ludendorff; and from this enormous German war machine one acts as the motor, the other as the flywheel, but the "Oberquartier Meister" imposes himself more and more as the boss of the gang and the real master of the Central Empires, for all, including the Kaiser, feel his apparent and hidden will.

The personal influence of Ludendorff has manifested itself in the foreign affairs with the same unbending will as in the interior politics. Thus the Junker von Oldenburg, in his speech on Feb. 21 at the congress of the landed proprietors, cynically declared: "Germany must attain its own aim of world domination. It is not at Wilhelmstrasse or at the Reichstag, but at Great General Headquarters, that the real German heart beats."

And the German Socialist chief, Haase, protested on Feb. 26, at the tribune of the Reichstag: "The truth, gentlemen, is that Count von Hertling is only a sign which covers the all-powerful military party; the real ruler is Ludendorff."

A fact is certain, and that is that Hindenburg could not do without Ludendorff. The people in Berlin have underscored this fact by christening Hindenburg Marshal "Was-sagst-du?" (Marshal What Do You Say?)—the latter being in the habit, on all occasions and in answer to any question submitted to him, of turning round to Ludendorff and saying, "What do you say?"

If truth is the bread of the strong, according to the profound saying of Lloyd George, the hour seems to have passed to place restrictions on that kind of bread. Therefore we must look in the face, not only the facts, but the men. When one tries to take the real measure of Ludendorff one must recognize in him a remarkable intelligence, a brain fertile with immense activities, a regulator and an organizer, and all these qualities sustained by a cold energy, a tenacious will, and a strong soul.

As a chief he excels primarily in the art of preparation; his conceptions, which are at once broad and precise, place at work powerful means scientifically regulated. His campaign in Rumania in the Autumn of 1916, for example, was organized with ability and flexibility. He had, moreover, executors of the first rank, Mackensen and Falkenhayn.

That Ludendorff should excel in handling the sword as well as the dagger; that he should use all the means, even the most barbarous as well as the most criminal; that he should cleverly utilize all the poisoned weapons of the German arsenal, treachery, corruption, and lies—all these methods indicate a cunning spirit, fertile in resources. Nevertheless they place an indelible blot on his reputation as a great captain.

If he has struck powerful blows at the Entente, he has nevertheless never accomplished those truly great achievements which carry the mark of genius. If he has won successes, it was almost invariably against weaker enemies, never by the sole superiority of talent.

On the other hand, the western theatre of operations has brought to Hindenburg and Ludendorff a series of uninterrupted checks since the month of August, 1916, which is date of their supreme command. That Hindenburg intends to make up for his lack of success, and Ludendorff to revenge his son, a young Lieutenant, killed at the Somme, is proved by the relentless character of the two men.

If the team Hindenburg-Ludendorff appears formidable, it is not through genius and greatness, but by force, energy, and cruelty, much more incarnated by the vigorous maturity of Ludendorff than the heavy senility of Hindenburg. Without doubt these two men, who represent in German eyes good servants of the King, will have their place in the Germanic Pantheon of Donaustauff; but the battles engraved on their monuments recall but mediocre victories compared to those of the great shining names as of lightning epic poems—the Marne, Verdun—which already blaze in golden letters on the frieze of our French glories.

War Poem Read to the Senate

SENATOR JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS read to the Senate a few days ago the following poem, which he called a "Toast to the Kaiser," written by George Morrow Mayo, formerly a railway clerk, now a gunner's mate in the navy:

Here's to the Blue of the wind-swept North,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the sons of the North advance.

And here's to the Gray of the sun-kissed South,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of God be with us all
As the sons of the Flag advance.

America's Aloofness from Allied Councils

CLOSE TO OUR MEN IN FRANCE

Their Joys and Sorrows, Thrills and Toil, Recorded on the Western Battlefront by a Secretary of the Army Y. M. C. A.

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER.

Somewhere in France,
May 1, 1918.

WE wish we knew all the folks at home know about this drive, for we have to depend for information upon very scanty bulletins and numberless horrific rumors. It calls for a great faith to believe that the boche deluge will yet be dammed. Have the folks at home that faith?

The Sammie has it. It is perfectly true that he has not yet had an opportunity for prolonged close acquaintance with our near neighbor, the boche, but he lives in superb confidence that the boche hasn't a chance in the world. He is "out of luck," now that Uncle Sam is on the scene of activities. "Just wait until the Americans get a chance! Then good-night for the boche!" We hear—probably without foundation in fact—that Americans are on the British front. "And you can bet they aren't retreating!" We wish we were there. * * *

I think I have said before that the Sammie is a good deal of a child. And he is. For this war game is a primitive occupation after all, reducing a man to his elements, and to be elemental is to be childlike. Your soldier is the simplest-minded creature on earth, of quick and tempestuous passions, and even swifter reactions, easily amused, easily disgruntled, easily trained, of very limited desires—and desiring most of all what he cannot have. One should add credulity to this list of characteristics. I have wondered how the German Government could keep up the morale of its armies through all these years of fearful sacrifice. It is no longer a mystery, for you can tell a soldier that he is invincible and he will believe you implicitly—and usually, so far as I can learn, he will go right out and act upon that belief, if you give him a chance.

Perhaps credulity is infectious. I myself have the notion that our Yanks are going to prove themselves the finest soldiers in the world.

Naturally, you don't expect to find slackers among men most of whom volunteered for their service in the army. But it is most heartening to note the spirit of the men of our army. They don't want this war fought out entirely by the British and the French, homesick as they all are for their own land. They want a chance at the boche, to prove that they are the equals of our allies. They will be intensely disappointed if the war ends without giving them some real fighting. So shall I. * * *

They do not care for life in billets, being Americans and therefore stirring individuals. But they do find life in the trenches, of the miseries of which so much has been written, far from unbearable. Scores have said to me, "I'd a heap rather stay in the trenches, where there's something doing, than come back here to rest camp. * * *"

It is so easy for one who really tries to come close to these men. They have no class pride, to exclude us noncombatants from intimacy; they are hungry for friendship. And the "point of contact"—to be very professional!—is not hard to find.

You stand at the counter, passing out coffee and "smokes," and a little roly-poly chap, sturdy for all that, comes up for cigars, and lingers in the manner of indifference which is suppposed to disguise an appetite for conversation.

You throw out a line in the dark. "Back in the States, the part I come from, they smoke tobies."

"Tobies! Where do you come from?"

"Pittsburgh."

Dugout in Which Y. M. C. A. Quarters Have Been Established Near the Front Line of Battle in France.

"Pittsburgh! Oh, my heart and soul! Shake, will you?" and across the counter reaches a grimy fist and takes your grimy fist in a grip that hurts. "Say, but I'm glad to see some one from home. I'm from Duquesne myself." (Duquesne is a suburb of Pittsburgh.)

That chat goes on. "Duquesne," it appears, is lonesome and homesick and disgusted with army life, and wishes the war were over, or at least that he were out of it. (He doesn't wish that at all, but he's out of condition, hence out of sorts, and thinks he does. Two days at home, and he'd want to be back here.) Now, as we see it, that's our job—to put a hand under the arm of the chap who is "in the dumps" and give him a lift. And so you and "Duquesne" happen to meet often, and you try to have a joke ready for him on all occasions. And "Duquesne," when he isn't on detail, is usually hanging around the Y. M., and gradually the tired, discouraged look is going out of his eyes. Maybe it is because his digestion is better, but you like to think it is partly because you have given him a little much-needed cheer, and have found favor in his sight.

Elsie Janis at an American Camp in France, Where She Has Been Entertaining the Soldiers Under Y. M. C. A. Auspices. [She Is the American Girl Mentioned in Mr. Miller's Article.]

"Mississippi" is another sort altogether. He is a boy, a mere child under arms, who was in a Swiss school when Uncle Sam went to war, and, though he hadn't been in the States for five years, just had to enlist over here. He's a trim, handsome little fellow, always neat as a pin, with the most delightful of boyish swaggers. He isn't downhearted—but he is almost too young to be turned loose in an army rest camp, and needs something to hold him to wholesome interests. So you watch for your chance, and one day, finding him making a little group of one in a corner of the tent, you saunter forth with a baseball and ask him if he doesn't want to loosen up a bit. "Mississippi" was too young for baseball when he left the States, and had never caught a baseball or seen a game in his life, but he is game, and out in the sunshine you spend an hour bunging up fingers long since out of practice and making friends with the finest little gentleman you ever saw.

"Alabama" is still another type, a fine, upstanding man, a college graduate, lately an athlete of parts and now every inch a soldier. But he, too, has a mood when he wants to talk to some one out of the army, and while munching a cake of chocolate he tells all about Birmingham and the very fine folks who live there, and talks about "shoes and ships and sealing-wax and cabbages and kings" until well after closing time, and thus gets the habit of the Y. M. Now he's a regular visitor in the evenings, and once in a burst of confidence tells you he comes for the chat, not for the eats. When you tell him he needn't buy anything and that the chat is free, he retorts, "But I considuh every cent I spend heah as an investment, Sah."

The Y. M. C. A. has many functions, to repeat again, and gradually the scope of the work over here widens. The other night we had an entertainment. In announcing it beforehand we passed the word around that there was to be a girl—a real girl, a real American girl, who would sing and play. A word was enough, for like lightning the news flashed over the village, "There's going to be an American girl at the Y. M." On the scheduled night the tent was filled—nay, one solid mass of soldier stuff, three-fourths of them having to stand, but not minding that in the least if so be they could catch a glimpse of a real girl.

She came, was seen and heard, and conquered. She sat at the piano and sang a love song, and you could feel the rapt attention and delight with which she was heard. There was an encore, of course, and she sang again, a very gem of a song about Yankee Doodle coming to parley-vous-Francay, and she had to sing that again. She was accompanied by a very fine baritone, who stirred the men with his songs while she played his accompaniments. The concert was long, but not long enough for the men, and when the program was over the entertainers spent another hour singing with the men, who were a joy to behold as they manoeuvred to get a place behind the piano where they could feast their eyes upon the vision of the "real girl."

Talk about "points of contact"! We had one now.

Even the best of things must come to an end, and eventually the entertainers had to leave. When they were gone I strolled out for a breath of fresh air. It was a rare night, a full moon was shining clear—a night for dreams. And I found in the orchard which surrounds the tent perhaps a dozen little groups, silent mostly. I think every one of them stopped me to remark, "Say, 'Y,' that was a great concert, wasn't it?" I agreed, to be sure, as in all conscience I could. "And say, 'Y,' that was some girl, wasn't she?" I agreed again, and even upon oath I could not have dissented. "You can take it from me, 'Y,' these French skirts haven't anything on our American girls, have they?" I couldn't see that they had. "Why, 'Y,' I know girls in America who have anything in France chased clear off the map. I wouldn't swap one of them for all the girls in France." I agreed with that also. And then we came to the point of the whole matter. "Why, I know one girl back in Oklahoma who's the queen of 'em all, and say, 'Y,' * * *"

But it wouldn't be fair to set down all I heard that night, though I must say that I have learned that the prettiest and finest and sweetest and best girl in the world lives in New York, also in California, also in Montana, also in Ohio, with residences in North Dakota, South Carolina, Louisiana, West Virginia, Massachusetts, and Maryland. She must be a well-traveled young lady. Also she never looks the same in any two places. Of this I am sure, for that night I saw at least seven different photographs of her, and you would never have guessed that they were all of the same girl—"the queen of 'em all!"

I am confident that I shall depart from the war zone without having visualized which they have converted "the smiling lands of France."

Across this desert we and our allies must transport our troops and munitions of all kinds, and we shall be 200 miles further away from our own base on the sea. In order to have any chance of crossing this wide and deep river and pushing across the 300 miles from Strassburg and Metz to Berlin we must have a greatly preponderating force; and as the French and British have passed the peak of their man power our contribution must be very large, not less than 2,000,000 men on the fighting line, constantly maintained at that strength from reserves in training of at least equal numbers. This is nearly twice as many as the British will then be able to supply (they have probably never had as many as 1,300,000 men on the fighting line at one time) and fully as great as the French. The British and French commanders will be nerve-exhausted by the strain of more than four years of unparalleled responsibility.

The principle of unified command has at last been established at the expense of British traditions fully 1,000 years old; and it is quite among the possibilities that the commander of the 5,000,000 men engaged in winning the final victory will be some young West Point graduate now commanding a regiment or brigade in France and as unknown to fame as Grant and Sherman were in 1861 and the early part of 1862.

Upon this man, whoever he may be, will devolve a responsibility as a military commander compared with which those of Caesar and Napoleon will seem small. Upon his ability successfully to handle unprecedented numbers of infantry in an attack upon present-day trenches and all their accessories will depend the lives of many hundred thousands of American lads. God grant that he have ability commensurate with his supreme task, for which history presents no precedent and comparatively little guidance.

The Magnifying Glass

Eastern Siberia, and perhaps for this reason from time to time voices would be heard demanding that the intervention should be accomplished only by the Land of the Rising Sun. Such a settlement of the question, however, would hardly be proper, as quite independently of the will of the Japanese Government it would give rise to all sorts of false interpretations regarding the imperialistic tendencies of that Government. The German agents scattered all over Russia would utilize such a one-sided intervention as a trump watchword for the Germanophiles, based upon the fact of the recent Russo-Japanese war. And the Japanese Government itself, foreseeing the possible consequence of its single-handed interference in Russian affairs, would, it seems, be very unfavorable to such a settlement of the question. President Wilson, in his effort to preserve the broad principles of democracy, was first to express his disapproval of such a settlement of the Russian question.

This predetermines the elements out of which the future interallied army shall be composed. It must be in every sense of the word an interallied one. Active participation in the settlement of the Russian question should not be confined to this power or that one, not even to a political combination of powers, but should belong to all those powers that are animated with the sole purpose of combating Prussian militarism and are now carrying on that struggle, not to the life, but to the death, with the Central Empires.

It is essentially of no importance whether this or that power is numerically represented in the interallied army equally with the other powers. It is of importance only that for the purpose of military intervention in Russian affairs actual interallied control should be achieved. This would fully guarantee to Russia protection from any possible attack upon her sovereignty by this or that political combination.

Of essential importance also would be a broad participation of Slavic elements in this future military expedition. Just this sort of participation would prove to the Russian people that the allied powers by no means intend to attack her sovereignty or menace her national dignity, but that, on the contrary, these powers are actuated by only one purpose—to destroy the foundations of Bolshevist terrorism, and thereby make it possible for the Russian Nation to escape from the trap into which it was enticed by the intrigues of German agents.

There are now a multitude of Slavs in America, especially Poles, to whom a German victory would be equivalent to death. Poland, for example, cannot help recognizing the fact that her future fate is closely bound up with that of the great sister nation; cannot help realizing—and she does realize—that Russia, contracted by the Brest-Litovsk conference to the territorial boundaries of the fourteenth century, victim of economic robbery by Germany, and politically dishonored—that a Russia like that cannot in future extend any aid to the Polish people, who, under these conditions, would undoubtedly fall under the Prussian yoke. Therefore, the Poles, like other Slavs, will gladly fight for great Russia, for the ideal of free Slavonia.

There are many Slavs in the American Army, and they may soon be sent to the fields of hard battles in France, where, of course, they will fight with knightly valor against the Germanic hordes. But perhaps it would be better to send them to the Far East to cope with the Bolshevist bands for the greatness and glory of Russia, so closely related to them by ties of blood. There, amid other allied troops, the Slavic elements could form a fighting group around which, as around a battle flag, could gather all true sons of Russia, all those who stand for their political sovereignty, their cultural power, and their democratic future.

Optimistic Outlook Based on German Failures obstacles, if not an actual uprising against the invaders.

I have written that the German Government has abandoned the high hope of securing what the Berlin newspapers call a "German victory," namely, the imposition of German conditions upon the rest of the world. The object during the next few months is to force the pace so that the end will be "a drawn game," an inconclusive peace, with Germany giving up what she will never be allowed to hold but still able to point to the map of Europe and tell her people that the war has left the empire more powerful than it was in 1914, and therefore that victory has crowned the ambitions of the Hohenzollerns and the existence of the military caste has been justified.

If Germany can secure an accommodating peace which may be interpreted as a German win, the appalling loss of life and the prolonged sufferings are likely to be forgotten amid the general jubilation. But let the war be prolonged until the United States can put her hosts of heroes into the field, until next Spring, when there will be an assembled American force of 2,500,000 men and every month bringing another 250,000 men.

Then Germany will have little to say in the terms of peace, except by agreeing to the dictates of the Allied War Council.

Disastrous though the German outlook is, if the war is prolonged into next year, what is likely to disturb the mind of Emperor William most is his own personal fate, the fate of the Hohenzollerns, and the fate of the war machine at the hands of an outraged and disillusioned democracy.

Accordingly we have a right to conclude that the thrusts and the blows on the western front represent Germany's supreme effort, not to win the war, for that she can never do, but to create a situation which will save her from losing it. Amid all the slaughter and woe, the Wilhelmstrasse keeps one eye on Washington. There are the mainsprings of the tremendous war machine which America can direct against Germany. Every day, despite the launching of costly onslaughts, the army of the Kaiser is weakening, and every day, with the increasing aid of the United States, the combined army of the Allies is waxing stronger.

The conclusion is therefore obvious, that the more America speeds her preparations, the quicker she plants her drilled and daring legions in France, the sooner will the war be concluded.

When will that be? Again it is dangerous to prophesy. But knowing something of the temperament of Germany, of the rising discontent of the people at hopes falsified, of the frenzy of the military party to reach a decision soon before a decision dictated by the Allies is secured, I hazard the speculation that the strife on the western front will proceed with varying fortunes until the peace offensive next Autumn fails, and then until America is in a position to deliver the aggressive blow. Then, without any forced crossing of the Rhine or any march to Berlin, the white flag will be hoisted.

Germany's U-Boat Bases and the Naval Zone

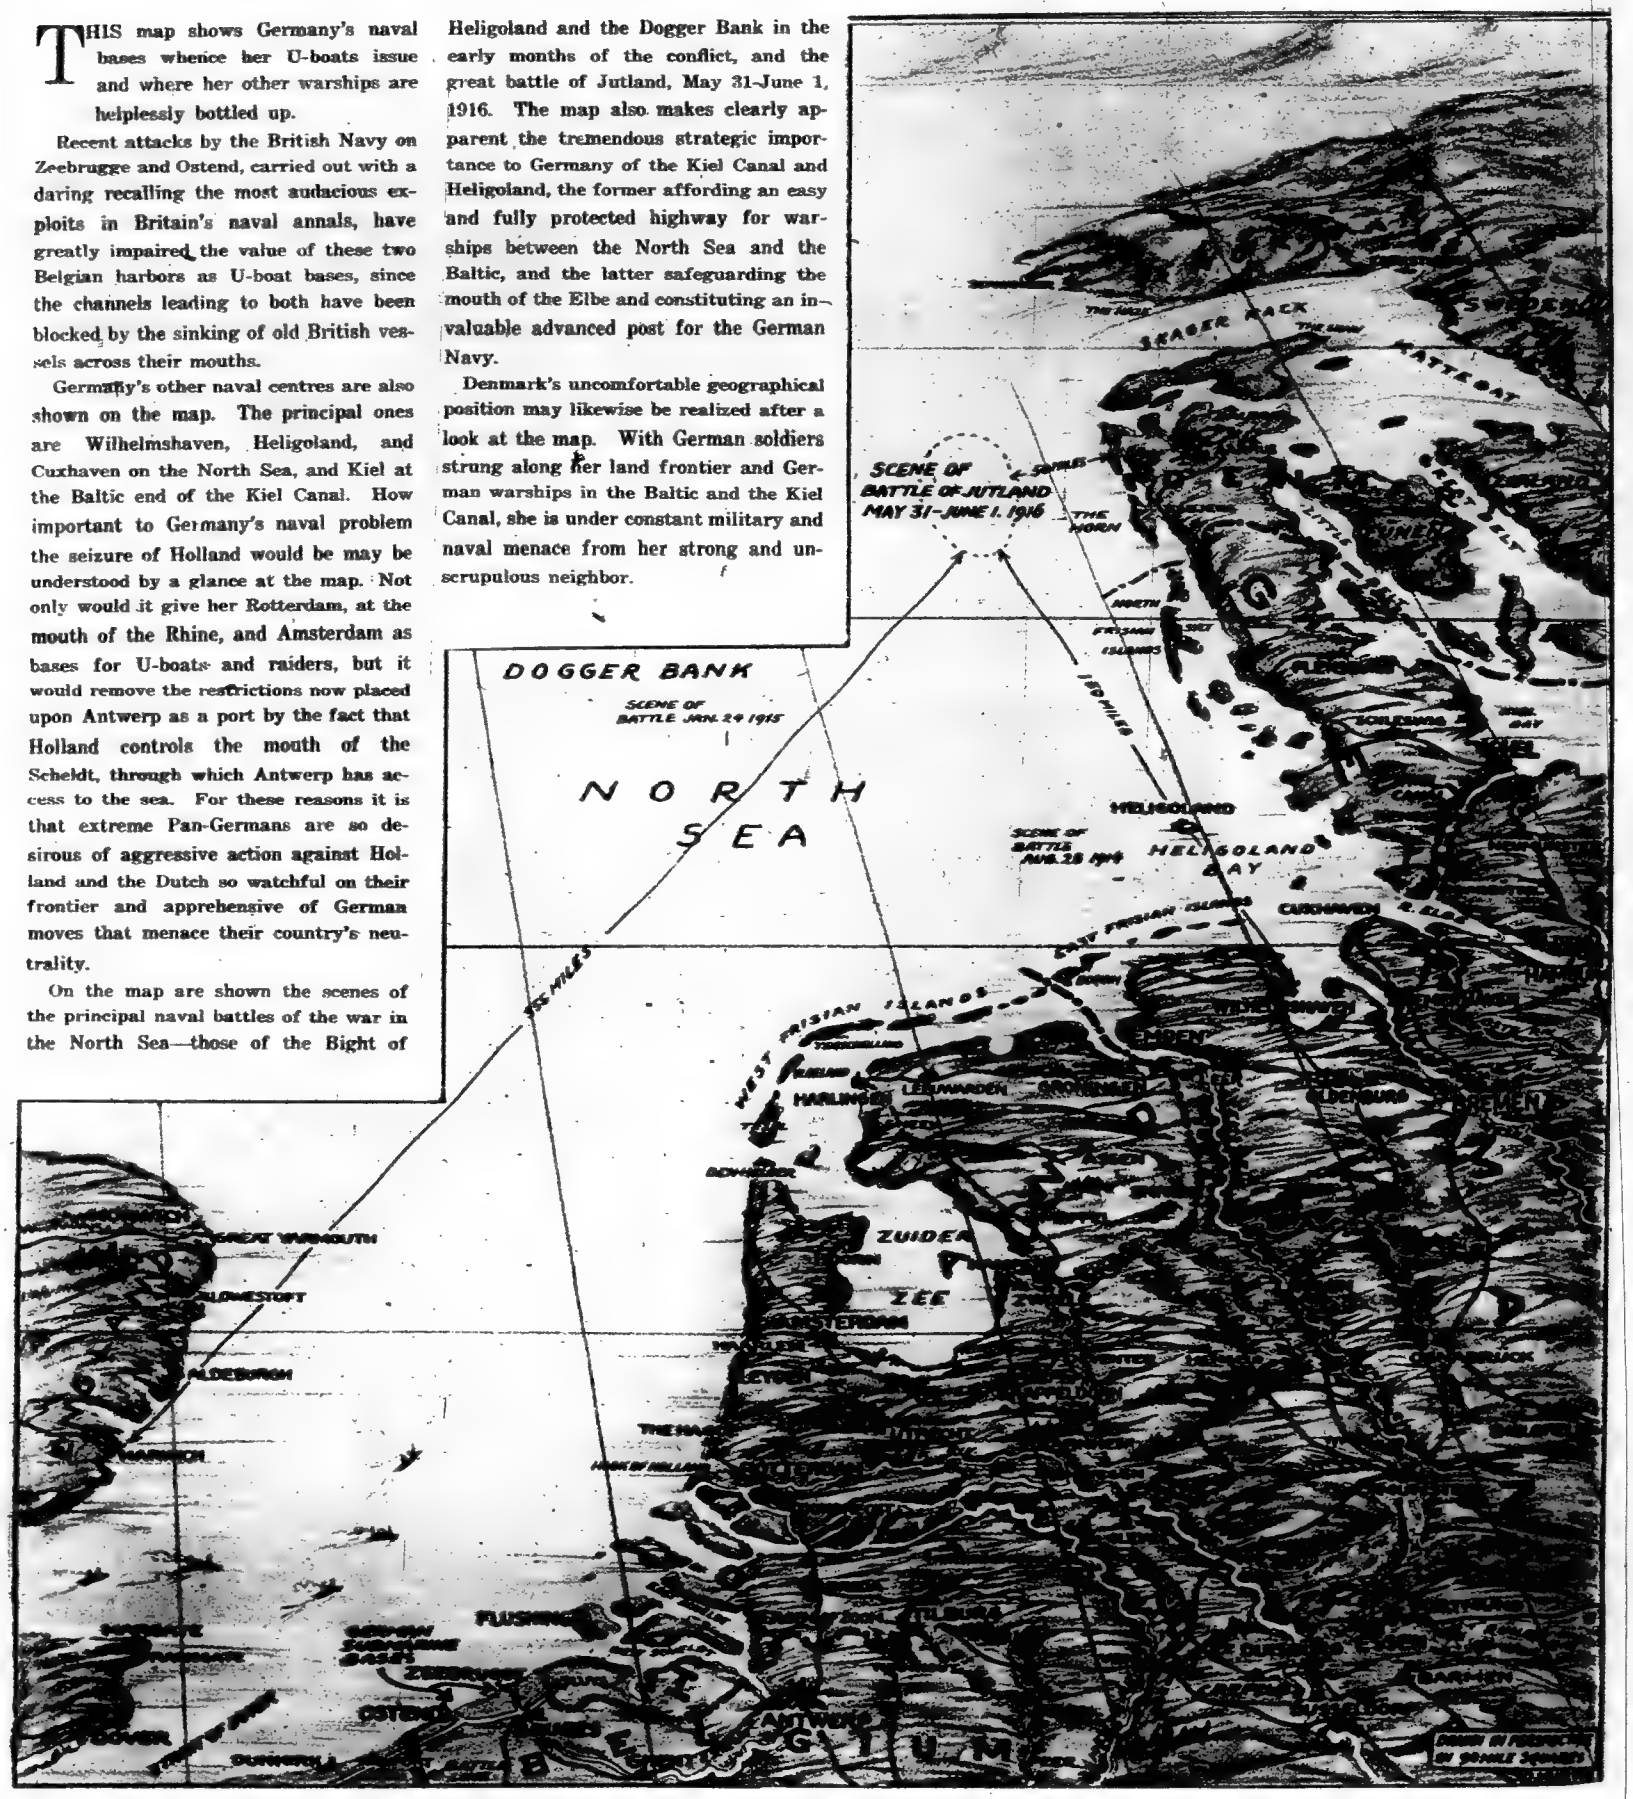
THIS map shows Germany's naval bases whence her U-boats issue and where her other warships are helplessly bottled up.

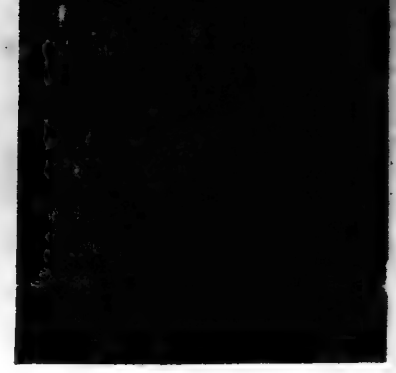
Recent attacks by the British Navy on Zeebrugge and Ostend, carried out with a daring recalling the most audacious exploits in Britain's naval annals, have greatly impaired the value of these two Belgian harbors as U-boat bases, since the channels leading to both have been blocked by the sinking of old British vessels across their mouths.

Germany's other naval centres are also shown on the map. The principal ones are Wilhelmshaven, Heligoland, and Cuxhaven on the North Sea, and Kiel at the Baltic end of the Kiel Canal. How important to Germany's naval problem the seizure of Holland would be may be understood by a glance at the map. Not only would it give her Rotterdam, at the mouth of the Rhine, and Amsterdam as bases for U-boats and raiders, but it would remove the restrictions now placed upon Antwerp as a port by the fact that Holland controls the mouth of the Scheldt, through which Antwerp has access to the sea. For these reasons it is that extreme Pan-Germans are so desirous of aggressive action against Holland and the Dutch so watchful on their frontier and apprehensive of German moves that menace their country's neutrality.

On the map are shown the scenes of the principal naval battles of the war in the North Sea—those of the Bight of Heligoland and the Dogger Bank in the early months of the conflict, and the great battle of Jutland, May 31-June 1, 1916. The map also makes clearly apparent the tremendous strategic importance to Germany of the Kiel Canal and Heligoland, the former affording an easy and fully protected highway for warships between the North Sea and the Baltic, and the latter safeguarding the mouth of the Elbe and constituting an invaluable advanced post for the German Navy.

Denmark's uncomfortable geographical position may likewise be realized after a look at the map. With German soldiers strung along her land frontier and German warships in the Baltic and the Kiel Canal, she is under constant military and naval menace from her strong and unscrupulous neighbor.





Bas-Relief Portrait of Miss Hoffman, by Edward McCartan.

(C) Malvina Hoffman.

"Russian Bacchanale," by Malvina Hoffman, to be Placed in the Luxembourg Garden, Paris. Accepted as a Gift from an American Collector.

Fountain Figure by Miss Hoffman. On the Grounds of Paul M. Warburg's Summer Home at White Plains.

Alexander for five years. During that time she made several portraits in oil and pastel of her father, who was Richard Hoffman, the musician. None of them satisfied her, and under the encouragement of Gutzon Borglum and Herbert Adams she did a portrait bust in sculpture, getting into it more of her father's character than she had been able to capture in the other mediums. Mr. Alexander recognized that she had gone further with her first piece of sculpture than in her five years of painting, and he together with the sculptors advised her to continue her training along that line.

As a preliminary experience she visited the studio of Paul Dubois, and then entered the Académie Julian, where she worked under Injalbert, Laurens, Coutan and Verlet. The period of her first visit was given to drawing. The first drawing she made was greeted by Rodin with the inquiry: "What do you call this?" "A drawing," was the reply. "Here we would call it a sketch," Rodin said. "Americans often make the mistake of considering a sketch a drawing. Michelangelo never made a sketch, and I advise you never again to make one."

She drew with Rodin first from drawings made by the old masters in every variety of technique to become familiar with the language of drawing—a language entirely different from that of painting. She then drew with her own technique from the living model. Her second period of study under Rodin was devoted to modeling in addition to drawing, and she constantly studied the Greek and Egyptian works in Rodin's private collection, a collection far too large to be housed in his own studio, and consequently scattered about Meudon in peasants' homes, in chicken houses and farm buildings. Rodin's criticism was of the most searching character, and he would frequently destroy the work of his pupils if he found it unsatisfactory. Miss Hoffman's work has survived this ordeal, showing that her work has an authority of construction and modeling greater than often is found in modern sculpture. Her nude figures are lifelike and sensitive, all the forms of the human body understood and indicated with fine appreciation of their essential character, the definite planes and highly developed muscles built up with structural soundness, and the whole infused with spirit and animation.

When the war began Miss Hoffman returned to America, and in response to the need she had witnessed in France became one of the founders of the Appui aux Artistes, the American headquarters of which are in the Fine Arts Building on Fifty-seventh Street. The three other women associated with her in the initial work of this association were the Vicomtesse de Rancougne, Enid Yandel, and Mrs. Gardner Hale. Rodin was the Honorary President, and there was a strong honorary committee in America. The Appui aux Artistes provides meals for workers in the arts and their families, and has established a workroom for women artists. Miss Hoffman has also been active in the Red Cross and other war work, but she has found time to continue her own work, and, however, the "Russian Bacchanale" will bear witness in the presence of the exacting French public to the energy and conscience of an American sculptor. The group as it will stand in the Luxembourg Garden is somewhat over life size, in order to appear of natural proportions when seen out of doors. The original group was only fifteen inches high, and is familiar to those who visit American exhibitions. Later a larger version, three feet in height, was made, and recently the version illustrated in this article. The only other copy of the large group is owned by H. G. Dalton of Cleveland, Ohio.

the war as a whole. But I am collecting "close-ups"—in movie parlance—that have their thrills, a gradual crescendo of thrills. Here is one:

A rainy evening, a very rainy evening, succeeding a day and night of steady, relentless downpour. The roads a morass, churned to a thin yellow liquid by the passing of many trucks, wagons, caissons and men. The Y. M. C. A. tent is filled beyond capacity—thrice as many men as can find seats—a very Babel of voices, all in the bass, drowning individual conversations.

Into the tent strides—or, rather, slouches—a Lieutenant, and comes behind the counter. He is wet to the skin, his face gray and drawn from fatigue. He is no waster of words. His company has marched all day over the swampy roads—an imposing number of kilometers—and is fagged out, and has had nothing to eat but one meal of hardtack and coffee since the night before. "What can you do for us?"

This, if you please, is the Y. M.'s chance. It is what we came to France hoping most to do. The tent is cleared of those who have billets. The Secretaries dash out through the rain to the well, draw many buckets of water, feed the fire until the stove is roaring and red hot. Before you could believe it, thirty gallons of water are boiling cheerfully.

Other officers drag their weary way behind the counter, filling cots and chairs and packing boxes. They look hungrily at our fat shelves. But they are a game lot and will not eat before their men have a chance.

Then into the tent comes a crowd of men, bedraggled, spent to the bone, hungry—oh, how hungry! Some grumble, some growl, some swear, but most of them are caught in the sullen silence of fatigue and deep discontent. Into the containers go great quantities of tea—it must be strong and very hot—and a line is formed. "Free tea!" goes the word down the line, and mess cups are out in a jiffy.

The tea is ready. The line moves. In an incredibly short time the thirty gallons have been consumed, but by that time another thirty gallons of water is boiling, and tea is made again and the line reforms. Now the tent is alive with voices once more—not growls or grumbles, but cheery, jocular laughing, narrating the incidents of the march, not funny at the time, but tremendously so in retrospect. Cigarettes and pipes are lit, and before the counter gathers a crowd, waiting patiently for turns to buy "eats," while the Secretaries, abandoning the stove, work feverishly at selling their wares.

An hour later and the rush is over. Around the Secretaries collects a group of Yanks, lately homesick, disgusted, and tired, now friendly, brave, and soldierly, made over by a very simple service rendered when there was a real need. We shall not soon forget that grateful group nor cease to be thankful for the chance to serve them.

This is war, and even a Y. M. man is subject to military requirements. There comes an order, "Be ready to move in ten minutes, the truck is waiting for you." We are always in marching order, and in ten minutes we are under way to a new post—where we know not and do not ask—without having had a chance to say even a brief farewell to the men we have come to know in nearly six weeks' service. That is hard, for some of them we know we shall never see again, and we have come to love them * * * fine, splendid soldiers that they are, but "c'est la guerre!" as we say in France.

Two days later one finds one's self in a great cantonment, where camps the battalion to which one is attached. Old friends, thank heaven! and with a ready welcome for the Y. M. man, even though he comes empty handed. Two days he spends—no, not working, since it is no hard task to sit about with Uncle Sam's boys, talking of this and that and the war. Then one is told that the battalion is to move tomorrow by train and that the Y. M. can serve tea at the train if it so desires.

The Y. M. so desires, and the Secretary moves on to the station, spends some hours in preparation for the coming task, sleeps a few hours more on the station floor, and on the morrow awaits the coming of his troops. At noon he begins to pass out hot tea, cigarettes, and chocolate bars (all free) to entraining soldiers, and keeps it up until 3:30 the next morning, when, a bit weary in spots, he joins his battalion, the last to entrain. It is very military, this adventure, the little French village station crowded with equipment, supplies, and troops, working with haste and method to get all on the long train of box flat cars. * * *

Fires burn along the track and at night groups of soldiers gather around, their faces silhouetted against the dancing flames. They are an interesting study, those faces—some grave, some anxious, some unaffectedly carefree. For we think we are going into the big battle, very soon perhaps, and the thought of the soldiers' risk is upon us. We face it as we are made. * * *

They are made well, most of these Yankee boys—it cannot be said too often; and in the big battle, if indeed that is their objective, they will acquit themselves like men. I have seen the proof.

Let me go back a few days. It is a glorious morning, such as only France in complaisant mood can furnish. On a level hilltop a band plays, and thither marches a battalion of "our boys." They spend an hour in close order drill under one of the finest drillmasters of the army—a magnificent sight, more than seven hundred men going through the manual and the most difficult evolutions in perfect unison. They come to "rest" at last, drawn up in six long lines. The Major commanding comes upon the field, a mere boy in years, but a soldier every inch of him, the son of a fighting father. "Battalion, attention!" The ranks stiffen into immobility. The youthful Major then reads an order from the high command, citing two men of this battalion for gallant conduct and awarding them the Croix de Guerre. A boche prisoner had been desired in order that our chiefs might get certain important information. These two men—a Lieutenant and a Sergeant—had crossed No Man's Land alone, penetrated the German trenches, and, after a hand-to-hand fight with a boche group, had taken their man alive and brought him safely back to our lines.

The Major made a little speech, not very elegant perhaps, but eloquent with sincerity and truly American. "We're going into the big battle now, I hope, and I expect that when it is over, not some of you men, but the whole battalion, will be cited. But if there is any dog here who shows the white feather I want him shot in his tracks!"

You could feel the thrill that ran down those rigid ranks. Then: "Lieutenant ——, and Sergeant ——, front and centre!" Two stalwart Yanks, trying hard to conceal their embarrassment, march forward and halt before their commander. He pins the medals on their chests. They stand beside him, as the whole battalion passes in review before them.

It was good to be there.

Let me prophesy. The medal manufacturers will have a busy time hereafter. Beside me stood a group from another battalion, intent upon the ceremony. When it was over one of them drew a long, audible sigh. Said he, as if to himself:

"That makes a fellow throw his shoulders back, you bet!"

"Yea, bo!" was the chorused rejoinder, and you could read in each eager face, "The next medal is going to be pinned on me."

THE gums are the first line of defense for the teeth. Without firm gums teeth cannot be sound. And tender, inflamed or flabby gums become positive sources of vital danger.

The spongy gum surface invites the seepage of decay-food germs into the system.

This condition is known as Pyorrhea (Riggs' Disease). Four out of five people over forty have it. And many even under thirty.

Use Forhan's daily and have no fear of tender gums, the first stage of Pyorrhea. Nor of dangerous tooth looseness, which accompanies Pyorrhea. Nor yet of prematurely flattened tips, which are the certain result of Pyorrhea.

On the contrary, Forhan's will make your gums texture-firm and tooth-supporting. No tooth-base decay will form below the gum line.

Forhan's will also scientifically cleanse your teeth. They will feel particularly smooth after using Forhan's.

Forhan's is pleasant, cool and antiseptic. If gum-shrinkage has already set in, start using Forhan's and consult a dentist for special treatment.

The Light Infantryman.

THE above etching is one of a series by Lieut. Jean Droit of the French Army showing the various types of French soldiers. The drawings interpret the indomitable spirit and the picturesque appearance of these fighters with dignity and force.

Two of the drawings are presented in the current Mid-Week Pictorial. They are reproduced in rotogravure, and are well worthy of framing.

SCENES that will live in history; pictures of events unparalleled in importance and interest, are shown weekly in Mid-Week Pictorial. It is a picture-record of the war that will prove invaluable in years to come.

The Mid-Week Pictorial contains 24 pages in rotogravure.

PERMANENT HAIR WAVING

CHARM and beauty are added to the hair by having it permanently waved. To those ladies having straight hair it is a positive necessity. No one should be without the blessing of wavy hair.

Mr. Kremer's personal attention is given to every patron with the assistance of his staff of capable artist-hairdressers.

The permanent wave has been so perfected here that it can now be had in six different sizes.

ANOTHER important innovation that is to be found exclusively at Kremer's is a patented device that waves the new hair which grows about 3 inches every 6 months, where the permanent wave has been given before.

Whether you have or not had your hair permanently waved; or should you desire the new growth of hair waved you will derive full satisfaction by starting and continuing at this establishment.

The New Nestlé Permanent Hair Wave

The Great New Improvement

The device shown here is the solution of a problem on which the Inventor has worked for years. Thousands of heads have been experimented on before this beautiful, permanent wave could be attained.

If you have the slightest inclination of a wave in your hair, or if your hair has been waved by a loose Permanent waving treatment, this "Nestol Comb" will perform wonders in your own hands—no hand expert could hope to accomplish such results.

This new invention has met with such immediate success that hundreds of orders have had to wait for weeks before our manufacturers could supply the demand.

If you have hair on your head to dress you will want it sooner or later—you must have it.

Present prices $2.00 and $2.50 (4 and 5 inch sizes).
Write for particulars now (prices will go higher).

ARE you a friend of the birds? They require food and shelter. We grow many berry-bearing trees and shrubs which provide food, and our evergreens will give just the shelter and nesting sites they need. Remember, too, that the birds will help to destroy insects and pests that injure fruit trees, plants, etc. Nothing attracts the birds more than tangled thickets of berry-bearing shrubs. 67 species feed on Elder; 40 species feed on Dogwood Sumac, and Wild Cherry; 25 on Blueberry and Bayberry; 15 or more on Holly, Viburnum, and Juneberry; 10 feed on Spicebush, Snowberry, Barberry, Winterberry, Photinia, Indian Currant, and Bush Honeysuckle. These bright-berried plants for the birds are a specialty with us. We will send you 10 assorted plants for $1, or 50 plants for $4.50, or 100 for $8—all prepaid.

"Why should I feel so worn out?"

Does the slightest effort leave you utterly exhausted?

After a day at the office, an afternoon of shopping or even an hour's work about the house, are you so dead tired that when you sit down you feel as if you could never get up again?

Are you slowly giving way under the strain of beginning each day tired? If you are, take warning in time; fatigue is wrecking your health.

One big factor in producing fatigue is the constant pounding of your hard leather heels on a still harder pavement

With every step you take, you are needlessly draining away your nervous force.

Make this change and note the instant relief

Begin today to save your strength by taking this needless strain off your spine. Put soft, springy O'Sullivan's Heels on your shoes—notice the difference they make. They eliminate the daily jolts and jars that sap your energy. They give relief at once.

Have your shoes fitted with O'Sullivan's Heels and save the strength you have been wasting.

O'Sullivan's Heels are guaranteed to outlast any other heels. They will last three times as long as leather heels, and will give uniformly satisfactory service to the very last.

Because of our special process, O'Sullivan's Heels combine the greatest durability with the greatest resiliency. They are made of perfect heel material.

Buy your new shoes O'Sullivanized. Good dealers sell the latest style shoes with O'Sullivan's heels already attached. Have O'Sullivan's put on all your shoes today.

In black, white or tan, for men, women and children. Insist on O'Sullivan's—avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

Why my filmiest curtains never tear in the laundry

I USED to hang my dainty new curtains with a sigh, dreading from the beginning the ominous day when they would have to be spoiled in the laundry.

Now I never give them a thought—I have found how easy it is to keep them always fresh and new.

I wash them the modern way in pure Lux suds and with no rubbing. The dainty Lux flakes dissolve instantly in hot water and whip up into rich, pure suds. I souse the sheer lacey curtains in the foamy lather—gently squeeze the cleansing Lux suds through them again and again, then take them out so clean and fresh, with not a thread broken.

With Lux there is none of that old-time rubbing to break and tear the sheer material—there are no particles of undissolved soap to cling to the delicate threads through all the rinsings, and coarsen and yellow them.

Try Lux for your laciest curtains — for your fragile laces and finest table linen. See for yourself how simple it is to keep them white and pure. Your grocer, druggist or department store has Lux. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

How to wash fine curtains

Shake the dust carefully out of the curtains, then let them soak in clear, cold water for an hour to loosen the dirt. Use a tablespoonful of Lux to a gallon of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water, and whisk into a thick lather. Put the curtains in and souse thoroughly. Squeeze the suds through the fabric. Do not rub. Rinse three times in clear, hot water, and dry in the sun.

Silk and Colored Curtains should not be soaked. Wet in cold water, then wash quickly in lukewarm suds, rinse three times in clear, lukewarm water, and dry in the shade.

Use Lux for anything that pure water alone won't injure.

Even in hard water, Lux makes wonderful suds

WOMEN TO ENROLL FOR PRIMARIES NEXT SATURDAY

HOURS FOR POLLING FROM 8 A. M. TO 10 P. M.

How Voters Are to Register Their Party Preferences for Next September's Primaries.

Under the operation of the election law of the State and the manner of its administration by the Board of Elections, it frequently happens that official election notices are published in papers of small circulation, with the result that these formal notices do not go directly to more than a fraction of the voters for whose information they are published. This is happening in the case of the formal notice of the primary enrollment of women to be held on May 25, although the special act of the Legislature under which this enrollment is being held left the Board of Elections free to choose any two papers in each of the boroughs of the city. THE TIMES therefore publishes today the full list of enrollment places in New York City, so that this information may be available to the largest possible number of the voters who will be called upon to express their party preference next Saturday.

ENFRANCHISED women in this city, and in cities and villages up-State with a population of 5,000 or more, will have their first opportunity next Saturday to qualify for full political partnership with the men who have had the ballot since the birth of the Republic.

Under an act passed at the recent session of the Legislature, May 25 has been set aside as a day on which women, enfranchised last November through the ratification at the polls of the woman suffrage amendment to the State Constitution, may enroll as full-fledged members of any political party with which they may choose to become affiliated, thereby acquiring the right to participate in its primary next Fall when candidates for Governor and other elective State offices, for Congress, for State Senate and Assembly, and many places in local governments are to be nominated.

It is only by affiliating through enrollment with a party that a woman can obtain this right. It is only by voting in the primaries that women voters can reap the full fruit of the victory they won after a struggle that had lasted for more than half a century when the suffrage amendment won the approval of the electorate last Fall. The nomination of candidates is not the only question of moment settled at the primaries. Members of all the committees to which is intrusted the management of parties are chosen at primary elections in this State.

It is safe to say that no recent political event in this State has aroused to such a pitch of acute interest and apprehension political leaders of all persuasions as has the prospective enrollment next Saturday of women voters in this city and other populous communities throughout the State, where the bulk of the vote is cast in every primary and general election. Woman as yet is an unknown quantity in the political life of this State. Her advent into politics, armed with the ballot, in all likelihood will have the effect ultimately of doubling the number of voters. The enrollment, in the opinion of the men leaders, may have the effect of doubling the number of voters who choose to have a direct say in the management of their respective parties through participation in primary elections. Among the men responsible for the conduct of political organizations there are some who foresee the possibility of revolutionary changes as the result of this new force in politics.

Will Indicate Women's Vote.

Next Saturday's enrollment is of interest to political leaders of all parties in this State also, because it will afford them the first reliable indication of how women's votes are most likely to tip the political scales in general elections. The enrollment in rural sections, which has been in progress since Thursday and will continue for a month, at the most may be regarded as a straw to indicate how the wind blows, for only a comparatively small proportion of the vote comes from rural localities. Yet the leaders are engaged in a constant quest for the latest information as to how the enrollment up-State is proceeding.

From the point of view of the political manager a large enrollment of women under ordinary circumstances would not be a desirable thing. From the viewpoint of the average voter, however, it should be highly desirable. A large primary vote affords no advantage to the political boss; rather the reverse. In the primaries the strength of a party leader is not in numbers, but in opportunities for successful manipulation, and these naturally diminish in direct proportion to the number of primary voters.

Edwin S. Harris, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, said yesterday that in his opinion there would be a large enrollment of women in this city, and that a majority of them would enroll with the Democratic Party.

"Reports that I have received from the Democratic County Chairmen up-State," said Mr. Harris at the Democratic Club yesterday, "indicate that women are keenly alive to what this opportunity to affiliate themselves with parties means to them. The reports indicate, too, that the elaborate machinery for the enrollment of women up-State which was provided by the Republican Legislature in the act under which the enrollment is being conducted was superfluous, as representatives of the women's organizations insisted at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate when the bill was in process of preparation.

"Of course, the Republican leaders up-State are using the 'fireside enrollment' plan provided in the act for localities where enrollment by certificate is the rule for the purpose of carrying on house to house missionary work, in many instances of pronouncedly factional character. We regard this as an affront to the newly enfranchised women. We will engage in no such work on any scale whatsoever, but will depend upon women who think to affiliate with the Democratic Party from their own free will and without solicitation or importunities.

"In my opinion the Administration of President Wilson has made a powerful appeal to the imagination of women everywhere in this country, and this State is no exception. I believe that this will be a determining factor with the newly enfranchised women. Support for the war policies of the Wilson Administration is a matter of vital interest to every mother in this State who has a boy at the front, for the more whole-hearted support that is given President Wilson the sooner the war will end, and the boys who now are battling for democracy in Europe return to their homes and their loved ones. This I regard as an important factor in favor of a large enrollment of women in the Democratic ranks, for as they intend to vote on Election Day, so the women will enroll for the primaries."

The Democratic State Committee recently promulgated an address to women voters, drafted by a subcommittee composed of six women and two men affiliated with the Executive Committee of the party organization, urging them to enroll under the Democratic emblem. The fact that the Democratic Party managers do not at this time anticipate a primary contest over the Governorship may be responsible in some measure for their refraining from anything which might appear as an attempt to "drag the women in."

"The interest that is being displayed by the women in the coming enrollment is tremendous," said Chairman Samuel S. Koenig of the Republican Count Committee. "If the same interest holds throughout the primaries and the general election it will be very hard to prognosticate the result. Naturally, the women are lining up very much the same as the men, and it is conceivable that the final vote will not be decidedly different from what it would have been if only the men voted.

Interest in Republican Districts.

"Our experience has been that the women members of a family vote very much the same as the male members do. Of course, we have nothing official to go by except the result of the election in the four Congressional districts last year, but that had a national significance, which of course the coming State election will not have. In the Republican districts the women are evincing a very great interest, and this augurs well for the Republican Party. For several months we have been holding county committee meetings which women have been invited to attend. At every meeting the women have been out in force and the reports of our district women committees show that the same interest in political affairs extends right down through all sections of the city.

"I predict that there will be an enormous enrollment of women on May 25. The Republican Party will get its full share of this enrollment, and maybe considerable more. The arguments our workers have put forth are calculated to appeal to the woman voter more than the arguments of the Tammany solicitors. Women are taking an intelligent interest in the political situation, and they will vote with intelligence. The indications are that the percentage of women who will enroll will be greater than the men. After the enrollment is over the real work will begin. We will then seek to show the women throughout the city why the Republican candidates who will be up for election this Fall should be supported rather than the Tammany candidates."

The active propaganda conducted by the Republican leaders with a view to inducing women to enroll with the Republican Party is regarded as an inevitable corollary to the fights looming on the Republican horizon, and which include not only a contest over the Gubernatorial nomination but over nominations for other elective State offices. Leadership fights in some up-State counties are also in prospect.

In this city both Democrats and Republicans have been zealous in preparing to derive party advantage from next Saturday's enrollment. Both parties have organized the women of the various Assembly districts down to an election district basis, almost as minutely as the men voters have been organized. Both parties in these ante-enrollment days are conducting house to house canvasses in an endeavor to win the women through the distribution of literature and personal appeals.

Suffrage Estimate Low.

An estimate of the women in this city who will enroll next Saturday, furnished at the headquarters of the Woman Suffrage Party, places that number at approximately 350,000. The estimates of the men who have been identified with the work the Democratic and Republican organizations have done in preparation for the enrollment places the prospective total enrollment of women in the five boroughs at a much higher figure.

The Board of Elections in arranging for the enrollment in this city is prepared to take care of 750,000. There is no reason to believe that such a large number of women voters will present themselves for enrollment, but the estimate of the suffrage workers is regarded as far below the prospective total. In the enrollment conducted on the registration days prior to the municipal election last fall a little more than 625,000 men in this city enrolled, and there is reason to believe that the number of women who could qualify for enrollment if they chose to do so next Saturday should not run very far below that figure. Should the number prove as low as the suffragist estimate it would be an indication that a number of women, as some suffrage leaders have suggested they should, have decided to hold aloof from the parties, so as not to scatter their forces.

This argument loses some of its force from the fact that a woman by enrolling with a party of her choice does not in any way forego her freedom of action on election day. Women voters may contend in the primaries of one party for the nomination of a candidate of their choice and, failing to accomplish his selection, may unite with women affiliated with other parties in their action on election day without violating any legal provision, even though under ordinary circumstances it may not be regarded as in keeping with the best party ethics. In enrolling, voters merely declare that they are in general sympathy with the party in which they enroll and that it is their intention in the main to vote for the candidates of that party in the general election.

The Board of Elections has been at work for many weeks making arrangement for the enrollment of women. New election inspectors have been examined and sworn in who will serve in the 2,260 polling places in the city, one for each election district. In each polling place two election inspectors will be on duty continuously from 8 o'clock in the morning, when the enrollment begins, until 10 o'clock at night, when it closes.

Both political parties and the suffrage organizations are making elaborate provisions for watchers to enforce the legal provisions against electioneering in the proximity of the polls. The special act under which the enrollment of women is conducted provides for the challenging of women who present themselves for enrollment, but whose right to enroll may be open to question. One of the male leaders in discussing this phase of the enrollment said with a smile that he did not expect that this provision would be taken advantage of to any considerable extent. In any event a women challenged when applying for enrollment will have the same right that challenged voters enjoy of swearing in her enrollment blank. Any fraudulent declaration or any attempt to secure enrollment under false pretenses is punishable under the special act as a misdemeanor.

For the benefit of the women enrolling, John R. Voorhis, President of the Board of Elections, issued blanket instructions yesterday to all the men who will act as Election Inspectors to refrain from smoking while on duty at the enrollment places.

"It will lend dignity and character to the affair," said Mr. Voorhis. "I thought it was due the women to make their formal entry into political partnership with the men as pleasant and free from annoyance as possible, even though I am well aware that the women themselves would not think of exacting a nonsmoking rule."

Mr. Voorhis, who, besides being a veteran in politics has seen long service in official positions which have brought him in close contact with election matters, said that he regarded the separate enrollment at this time a very fortunate thing for the prospective women voters.

Can Learn in Comfort.

"By enrolling at this time," Mr. Voorhis said, "the women will be afforded an opportunity to learn the A B C of voting without any of the men voters who have had long practice at it being there to observe and embarass. There will be no men in the polling places with the exception of the two inspectors, with possibly an officer in uniform in the street outside, and they should make no difference for they will mind their own business strictly."

WHY WOMEN VOTERS SHOULD ENROLL

By MRS. JAMES LEES LAIDLAW,
Acting Chairman New York State Suffrage Party.

EVERY suffragist worker knows that the State-wide personal enrollment day, May 25, was won for the great army of new women voters in places of 5,000 population and over, by the unwearying clear-sighted action of the Legislative Committee of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party. On every single day throughout the legislative session, Mrs. Helen M. Leavitt, the legislative representative of the State Suffrage Party at Albany, followed every move made by politicians of all parties in connection with the Registration Enrollment bill, introduced originally by the Suffrage Party.

Single handed, the New York State Woman Suffrage Party was victorious in the fight for personal enrollment, this victory for the women following immediately on a hearing at the Capitol, Albany, which brought suffrage leaders from every corner of the State as defenders of the bill's integrity and as proponents of fair play for the new voters.

In spite of all kinds of rumors to the contrary, the New York State Woman Suffrage Party, as an organization, is a nonpartisan body. Its stand on the question of enrollment was reaffirmed at a meeting of the Executive Board held at New York, March 19, when the following resolution was adopted:

"That the Board reaffirms the attitude which it took at the State Convention, that while as an organization it remains nonpartisan, its members have entire liberty of action to enroll in the party of their choice."

"Guarantee of True Independence."

This liberty of action we regard as the only guarantee of true independence and first hand thinking. We don't want an independent woman's party, but we do want fearless, independent women voters.

Judged by this test, those of our leaders who enroll with the political parties of their choice and those who abstain from enrolling are equally true to the best light they have, because they will act in the way that in their judgment is most likely to leave their followers free to act, uninfluenced by past associations.

There is the Enrollment bill, we say. We worked hard to make it a good one. Use it in the best interests of State and city.

Certainly the most important of all

By MARY GARRETT HAY,
Chairman of the New York City Women's Suffrage Party.

PERSONALLY, I believe in enrollment in a party on account of the opportunities it gives the citizen to take part in important preliminary proceedings. To my mind it is just as essential to help to nominate good men for office as to vote upon candidates at the general election after they have been nominated; it is just as necessary to have able and honest men and women serve on the committees of the parties as to have the parties pledged to right principles.

To enroll in May means to vote at the primary elections in September. It means a chance to nominate for city, county, State and national offices men who will patriotically support the Government in these trying times, the only kind of men we Americans want in office. It means a chance to place on the county and State committees of the parties citizens of integrity and ability who will make of the party platforms not campaign catchwords, but real guides to action. It means starting the great machinery of our elections right, not coming in at the eleventh hour to try and make the wheels revolve in a different direction.

If the machinations of self-seeking politicians are ever to be checked our citizens must use the primaries. If we want to elevate the parties we must do it from within, not from without, and so we must use the primaries. If we want higher purposes to control, better men to represent us, reforms to prevail, our opinions to have weight, we must work with the parties and in the parties.

The Talk of Scattering Forces.

I know that there are many persons who believe that women are foolish to scatter their forces by going into the parties, who point out to us that we lose power by doing this. My reply to this is that we do not want power, but the chance to serve where we are needed.

I do not believe in the formation of a woman's political party. I do not believe that men and women should be separated in their work for the State. I think that they have been separated too long. Just as we get better results by having men and women work together in the home, in society, in the church, and in the business world, so we will get better results if they work side by side in politics.

I do not believe that women in going into the parties will become merely duplicates of the men voters. I do not believe that they will be submerged, or fall under masculine domination. Some will, but the great mass of women will exert a tremendous influence on the parties. Not at first, perhaps, but in the long run. This is bound to be, because the modern woman is becoming more and more a self-reliant, thinking individual.

When I say that I think women will have a great influence on the parties, I do not mean that they will have too great an influence, that they will, for instance, hold the majority of the offices. As far as I can see, women are not especially anxious for office, nor do they advocate the putting into office of women just because they are women. Fitness for the position, not sex, should determine the matter.

A Way to Solve Problems Wisely.

Men and women working together will solve wisely all the problems that arise from the entrance of woman into the political world. And I hope that the women of this city will not hesitate to join forces with the men. Parties are not entirely made up of politicians, as some people seem to think. Our fathers, husbands, brothers, and sons constitute a large part of them, and these are the men we want to work with for better conditions.

My ideal for the woman voter is that she will enroll in a party if she indorses its principles; that she will vote in the primaries and at the general election because voting is a sacred privilege; that she will take into the parties her woman's ideas and ideals and try to work them out, being content even with slow progress provided there is progress; that she will not be a blind adherent of any party or follow party precedents too rigidly, and that she will judge of men and measures not only by man's business standards, but by those moral and humanitarian standards for which her sex stands.

Women voters of New York City, May 25 is a door that will open on great possibilities. I hope that thousands of you will enter that door and help to make the primaries in September memorable for the selection of splendid candidates and the best men and women it is possible to secure to work out the policies of our political parties.

EXPECT WOMEN TO DOUBLE VOTING LIST

Total Vote for New York City May Reach Million—Party Leaders Active.

THE enrollment of women this year, both in the State and city, is expected by party leaders to be proportionately far better than that of the men voters. On the same basis, it is predicted that a larger percentage of women than men will vote, not only in the primaries, but in the general election in November. Calculations of party leaders were completely upset last Fall when, at the special Congressional election in four districts in the city, women voted for the first time under the new franchise rights conferred upon them by the State.

It was predicted by the most observant Democratic and Republican leaders that the woman's vote would make no material difference, as the majority of them would not take the trouble to go to the polls, and those who did would follow closely along the same general lines of the male voters. The surprise came when it was discovered that a far greater percentage of women than men took the trouble to go to the polls on an "off" election. This was attributed to the fact that at the Congressional elections last year the women of New York City had their first opportunity to exercise the same franchise privilege as the men.

Up-State women have already received the privilege of enrolling in their respective parties, and on Saturday next the women of New York City will have the same opportunity. Realizing that the women are taking a decided interest in their right to enroll in any party they desire, Republican and Democratic leaders are working overtime to get as many women to the enrollment booths as possible.

May Hold Balance of Power.

If the proportion of women who registered last Fall in order to vote at the special Congressional election and then went to the polls and voted holds good throughout the State this year all former calculations will be completely upset and the women's vote will probably be proportionately greater than that of the male vote, with the result that the women will hold the balance of power throughout the State.

Both of the leading parties early realized the necessity of getting out a full woman vote, and both Republican and Democratic organizations have admitted women to their district and general committees, and have organized them so that they will make a thorough canvass of every election district in the city. The men leaders of the districts have also been importuned to work with the women leaders and see to it that every woman is enrolled in one party or the other. In their own way the Socialists are working along the same lines, and it is predicted the result will be that a heavy percentage of women will have joined the party of their preference so that they will be able to vote both at the primaries and at the November election.

The Republicans were the first to make overtures to the women voters. Early this year they chose unofficial district leaders, and invited them to take part in the deliberations of the County Committee. They did not officially elect district leaders, on the ground that the women had not enrolled, and it was impossible to determine the strength of the women in the various districts. The Democrats, on the other hand, left it to the various districts to appoint committees to select women leaders, with the result that the women selected were made members of the Executive Committee of Tammany Hall. As such, they are working side by side with the male district leaders, and have the same voice in the councils of the party.

House-to-House Canvass Made.

The women leaders of both parties have been busy for weeks making a house-to-house canvass, presenting arguments why the women members of the household should join either one party or the other and inducing them to enroll on May 25. These women leaders have reported that they have met great success, as the majority of women whom they have interviewed have expressed the intention of taking part in the selection of candidates at the primaries and also in voting for the candidates of the parties at the general election. With the vote practically doubled this year because of the addition of women voters, the prediction of leaders will be watched with unusual interest. The total registration last year of male voters in all the boroughs of the city was 696,809. The total enrollment of male voters in the same year was 625,707. The enrollment of women is expected to be equally as large, which will mean a total vote of more than 1,000,000. The male registration and enrollment for 1917 by all boroughs were as follows:

Borough.	Registration 1917.	Enrollment Dem.	Rep.	Soc.	Proh.	Total.

POLL SHOWS PARTY CHOICE OF 100 SUFFRAGE WORKERS

A POLL of 101 suffrage leaders and workers in New York City undertaken by the New York City Woman Suffrage Party at the request of THE NEW YORK TIMES to get some idea of the way the suffragists are going to enroll next Saturday shows that the two major parties, the Republican and the Democratic, will obtain the support of over three-quarters of these suffrage workers. The poll also shows that of these women the Republicans will enroll about four to every three enrolled by their opponents.

Suffrage officials at the headquarters of the New York City Woman Suffrage Party, at 3 East Thirty-eighth Street, say that the poll is a very fair indication of the enrollment that may be expected from the suffragists, although, of course, there is no indication of how the women not on the lists of the 500,000 in the suffrage organization will enroll. The poll follows:

Republicans	44
Democrats	33
Socialists	4
Independents	15
Prohibitionists	0
Undecided	7

An analysis of the poll shows that although the Socialist Party was unanimous in declaring for the cause of suffrage the suffragists are by no means ardent for socialism. Only four of the women whose intentions were registered in the poll expressed themselves in favor of the Socialist principles.

A story illustrating the attitude of the women toward socialism was told yesterday. It seems that a leading Socialist took it upon himself to canvass Harlem in an effort to interest the women there in his party. He spoke to several leaders urging them to enroll with the Socialists, making a plea that if they entered the party they could work from the inside to rid it of anarchistic tendencies.

"The Socialists will have to remodel their own party," was the answer of the suffrage workers. "When they have done this themselves it will be time to ask newly enfranchised voters to enroll."

A great number of women have asserted that they will not enroll in either party this Spring, preferring to wait until Fall, when they will cast their votes for the men and party they like best. This number will exceed 100,000, the suffrage leaders say, as against something like 350,000 or more suffragists who will cast their lots with one party or another. Another feature of the poll analysis is that the women are refusing to become cogs in the party machine. About three in every five who told how they expected to enroll asserted that they would follow the dictates of a particular party only when it suited them.

Reasons for Preferences.

Questions as to why they enrolled in one party or another were answered by the women who were polled in various ways. Those favoring the Democratic Party asserted that they felt the obligation resting on every one to support the President in the war crisis. This support could best be given, they felt, by enrolling in the President's own party.

Those choosing the Republican organization, on the other hand, said that while they believed the President should be supported they also felt that the Republicans included in their number the abler men.

Several women gave as a reason for joining the Republicans rather than the Democrats that "they liked the principles of the Democratic Party, but they liked the looks of the Republicans better." These women asserted that it was not necessarily the personal good looks of the Republicans that they admired, but rather, they said, in every meeting where men of both parties got together the Democrats seemed outclassed both in ability and appearance by their opponents.

Questions Which Women Voters Must Answer When Enrolling for the Party Primaries

Name and residence?
Number of room or floor occupied must be given, and, if a boarder, the elector must supply the name of the householder with whom she resides.
Age?
Women between 21 and 30 must give their exact age. If above 30, this is not necessary, "Over 30" being the only answer required.
Length of residence in State, county, and election district?
Country where born?
Naturalization by certificate or marriage?
If by certificate, its date and the court by which it was issued must be named.
Business or employment of elector?
Business address?
If employed, electors are required to give full name and address of employer.
Has elector registered in any military or war census in this or any other State since April 1, 1917?
In that event, what address was given?

After the answers have been entered on the enrollment register, the elector is required to affix her signature on the line where the entries have been made, as indicated by the Inspector. She will then receive an enrollment blank. Entering one of the booths provided for that purpose, she should mark the blank with a cross in the circle above the emblem of the party with which she desires to become affiliated. The blank should then be folded, but only once, and returned to the Inspector, who should deposit it in the ballot box in the presence of the voter.

Qualifications Which Are Required For Enrollment

To be qualified to enroll, a woman will have to be at least 21 years of age on Primary Day, Sept. 3 next. She must be a citizen by birth, marriage, or naturalization. She must be a resident of the election district where she applies for enrollment, with the intention of residing there until the general election in November, when she must have been a continuous resident of the State for at last one year.

If a woman of foreign birth, who has married a native or naturalized citizen of the United States, she becomes a citizen by her marriage when she has resided in the United States for five years. She retains her citizenship even after the termination of her marriage through the death of her husband or divorce, provided she continues to live in this country. Birth in one of the alien enemy countries does not disable a woman married to a citizen from exercising the right of suffrage. A woman born of American parents who marries a foreigner forfeits her right to vote during the existence of such a marriage.

RAILROADS GET NEAR A BILLION FOR THEIR UPKEEP

Federal Administration Announces Great Allotments for Equipment and Betterments.

BUDGETS WERE PARED DOWN

Nearly $350,000,000 Eliminated, but with Hint That Increases May Be Made Later.

CENTRAL GETS THE MOST

Government Likely to Buy Railroad Securities Issued by Companies in Financing Their Improvements.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The railroads under Government operation this year will spend nearly a billion dollars for additions, betterments and equipment, or approximately three times as much as in any one of the last three years.

The total capital expenditures approved by the Railroad Administration as announced today are $937,961,318. Of this sum, $44 ,71,000 will be spent for additions and betterments, such as stations and other property improvements; $479,686,531 for equipment—cars and locomotives already ordered through the Railroad Administration, and $18,208,774 for track extensions.

The figures disclose Director General McAdoo's determination to let the railroads make many improvements which they had neglected in the last three years through permitting tracks to deteriorate and postponing all possible projects requiring large expenditures of capital. It also is shown that the Railroad Administration is not encouraging many extensions of lines during the war emergency, as practically all sums approved for extensions are to continue those already under construction, and in some cases projects already under way have been disapproved and work discontinued.

Budgets Were Pared Down.

The railroads in submitting budgets of proposed capital expenditures this year asked much more than was actually approved, and the Railroad Administration eliminated $349,247,000, or nearly one-fourth of the proposals. In paring down the budgets to this extent, the administration made it plain that most of its decisions were tentative, and might be reconsidered later in the light of any growing necessity or lack of need of betterments.

In general, the Eastern trunk lines receive generous sums for improvements and equipment, to enable them better to handle the great flood of traffic to the Atlantic seaboard for movement to Europe. In many cases, however, the budgets of Eastern roads were cut sharply.

Not only does the Railroad Administration exercise a restraining power over railroads' expansion of capital projects, but it also has authority to compel roads to make certain extensions which appear necessary.

A table made public today, and published in full elsewhere in this issue, shows that the New York Central receives $70,000,000, the largest allowance, and practically all the road asked. The Pennsylvania Lines East received $64,-000,000, and the Pennsylvania Lines West $48,000,000. The Baltimore & Ohio got $43,000,000, the Erie $26,000,000, and the New Haven $24,000,000. Other large allowances included: Santa Fé, $41,000,-000, the Union Pacific System $30,000,-000, Southern Pacific $29,000,000, Southern Railway $29,000,000, Illinois Central $26,000,000, Philadelphia & Reading $24,-000,000, St. Paul $23,000,000, Norfolk & Western $23,000,000, C., C., C. & St. L. $22,000,000, Boston & Maine $22,000,000, and Michigan Central $20,000,000.

Government May Buy Securities.

Part of the capital necessary will be supplied by the Government, from the $500,000,000 revolving fund of the Railroad Administration, although advances will be repaid eventually by the individual railroads. Wherever possible, railroads will finance their own enterprises, without Government aid, but the Railroad Administration may buy the bonds or other securities issued by the railroad to finance the capital propositions.

An examination of the budgets of the railroads has been directed by Robert S. Lovett, Chief of the Railroad Administration's Division of Capital Expenditures, and John Skelton Williams, Director of Finance and Purchases. The railroads were asked two months ago to submit estimates of proposed capital expenditures this year, making their estimates adequate to cover really necessary projects. They were told, however, to bear in mind that many betterments and extensions which might appear necessary under private management could be dispensed with under common control and pooling of facilities. In disapproving certain items, the Railroad Administration explained that they could be postponed until after the war. In this way Director General McAdoo adopts the same policy for railroads which, as Secretary of the Treasury, he asks other business interests to adopt as a war measure.

Allows Leeway for Increases.

This statement was given out by the Railroad Administration in connection with the table of allowances:

King George and General Foch Send Godspeed to the Red Cross

LONDON, May 19.—King George, in a telegram to President Wilson on the eve of the second Red Cross appeal, says:

"I thank you in the name of my people for the assistance already afforded the sick and wounded in the allied countries. * * * The unexampled munificence of America's first response provided a noble record in charitable effort, and I feel sure that her generous-hearted people will again respond to an extent that the resources of your great country alone can command."

WASHINGTON, May 19.—General Foch, in a cable to the Red Cross headquarters today, says:

"America has come into the war with the Allies. She has generously brought the aid of her army, of her resources, of all her industrial and commercial power. These are sure pledges of victory.

"But she had already done still more by her beneficence. The American Red Cross has from the beginning of the war rendered great service to our country, whose people and whose prosperity have suffered so much. Her active and fruitful work has dressed many wounds. Her discreet activity has been felt in the two great spheres of suffering.

"France will keep the never-to-be-forgotten memory of the impulse which has brought Americans to the bedside of her wounded."

And More, of Major Size, Will Be Put in Service in July and August.

SUBMARINE BEING MASTERED

Delaware Shipyard Will Turn Out More Tonnage Than Britain Put Out Before War.

Bainbridge Colby, United States Shipping Commissioner, speaking last night at the joint memorial services of the Hebrew Union Veteran Association and the Hebrew Veterans of the Spanish War held at Temple Beth-El, Fifth Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, declared that fifty ships of major size would be put into the service next month. He added that a larger number would be commissioned in July, and that the August output of the yards would be even greater.

"The submarine is at last on the point of being mastered," said Mr. Colby, "and we shall choke the seven seas with American shipping. I am revealing no secrets when I give the output for June, July, and August, and when I say that we now have a shipyard on the Delaware which will turn out tonnage greater than Great Britain's total output before the war."

Mr. Colby began by saying he felt the only sounds from the Emergency Fleet Corporation just now should be of ships sliding down the ways. He added that the rule of the shipbuilders should be "caulking not talking." Then turning to the war he continued:

"This is essentially America's war, and there can be no peace until brutal and cynical Germany is smashed to the ground. I say that this is America's war because there is no room in the world for the Germany of the Hohenzollerns and the America of Wilson."

Mr. Colby told of his recent trip along the western front, and urged his auditors not to "waste mushy tears on the soldiers over there." He said that the soldiers didn't need sympathy and were in wonderful trim, and that their confidence was an inspiration, for "they have met the enemy and they know that they are his superior in every respect."

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Schulman, rabbi of Temple Beth-El, said that to his mind the flag today was the symbol of a humanitarian democracy. He said that he expected the war to be of great benefit to the country for "the Revolution gave us liberty; the civil war proved that the States were not in a loose partnership, but an unbreakable union, and this war will forever banish the hyphen and make us all 100 per cent. Americans." Defending his co-religionists against the accusation that the Jews lacked courage and sought only peace, Dr. Schulman said:

"No Jew was ever taught the pernicious doctrine of peace at any price. Such a peace is based on the desire to save one's skin, and such a peace cannot come to the world. Peace, the goal of a righteous humanity, will only come to the world when humanity will submit to be governed by right instead of might. In the meantime there is going to be much and very hard fighting before that goal is reached. We must prove to Germany that efficiency can go hand in hand with democracy, and organization with individual liberty."

Dr. Schulman alluded to the fact that his son is serving as a Lieutenant with the Royal Flying Corps of the British army and that the son of Samuel J. Goldsmith, President of the Congregation Beth-El, is in France with the American forces. After Dr. Schulman had concluded Mr. Goldsmith read a letter which he received Saturday from his son, a very hopeful letter, but one in which the junior Goldsmith stressed the necessity of rigid support over here.

Hurley Tells of Shipping Plans.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, May 19.—Edward N. Hurley, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, in discussing the shipping situation today said:

"The magnitude of the work undertaken by the Government is evidenced by the fact that manufacturing work more than three times greater than that of the United States Steel Corporation is contemplated and that operating work more than twice that now done by the Pennsylvania Railroad is projected. There are now 192 shipyards in operation, and when the entire building program is under way more than 500,000 men will be employed.

"When the United States entered the war there were only 50,000 men skilled in the construction of ships in the entire country, so that it is a herculean task to assemble workmen formerly employed in other trades and teach them the technique of ship construction in its various complexities."

WASHINGTON SEES CHANCE TO BRING RUSSIA BACK IN WAR

But View Is Taken That It Must Be Seized Without Loss of Time.

DELAY TO FOE'S ADVANTAGE

And Military Aid to Bolshevist Government Would Play Germany's Game.

COMBINED ACTION URGED

National Aspirations Might Be Fostered by Joint Civil Commission with Military Protection.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19. — With increasing forcefulness the belief is taking ground in quarters best qualified to judge that the Russian situation presents opportunity for action that will bring Russia back as a potent factor on the side of the Allies. It is realized in these quarters, however, that if anything is to be done to aid Russia, and incidentally the allied cause, it must be done soon. Delay, it is contended, will be all to the advantage of Germany.

The growing desire that an effort be made to put Russia on her feet as a national entity has no connection with the treaty entered into between Japan and China to combat German aggression in the Far East and Bolshevist aggression under German guidance. A Paris press dispatch saying that Japan and China had been informed by the allied Governments that they have arranged for Entente military co-operation to meet the dangers threatening the peace of the Far East is not credited here. It does not accord with any of the intimate information that has reached Washington. At the same time it is conceded that the report probably has a basis in the knowledge that France, like Great Britain and Japan, is keen for assisting Russia in a military way to withstand German aggression and through this means give aid to the cause of the Allies generally.

A strong feeling exists among some of the men who have studied the Russian situation that nothing is to be gained now by furnishing military assistance to the seeming de facto authority in the former dominions of the Czar. There is little if any dissent among most observers from the view that the Bolsheviki are not capable of handling the situation in a way to assure ultimate success of a program having for its object the rehabilitation of Russia as a nation, and its probable reparticipation in the war. Besides, it is argued, an allied military expedition centring around Bolshevist authority would be nothing more than an adventure destined to failure.

Would Play Germany's Game.

Opinion is strong that an effort of this character would be exactly what Germany would wish. An immediate Bolshevist military movement with allied support would soon be crushed, it is claimed, and this would tend to discredit the Allies in the eyes of the great mass of the best people of Russia, who would be likely to condemn the allied Governments for shortsightedness and lack of statesmanship. These elements would naturally turn to Germany for aid in rehabilitating the country, and the opportunity of the Entente Governments, Japan and the United States would be lost, perhaps for all time.

In these circumstances consideration is directed to the necessity of adopting a plan of allied co-operation that will bring results favorable to Russian national aspirations and coincidentally to the success of the governments arrayed against the Central Powers. There is insistence that whatever action is contemplated should be planned at once and a beginning made to carry the plan into effect. Various elements must be handled carefully, but the diplomatic situation is not as delicate as might be supposed. In certain circles the feeling exists that all the various nations concerned must be satisfied before anything is done, and this will require exchanges between all the great Powers allied against Germany.

Great Britain and France are still strong in their belief that something should be done in a military way to check Germany's advance into Russian territory through armies in the west and south and through propagandist methods in the east. These two nations backed Japan in her suggestion that a Japanese force should be sent into Eastern Siberia to protect the nationals of the allied nations, prevent the immense quantities of military stores at Vladivostok, most of them paid for with allied money, from falling into German hands, and generally safeguarding the interests of the Allies in Far Eastern Russian territory. To this proposal the United States Government would not agree, partly on the ground that it might cause the Russians to lose confidence in allied assurances of unselfish purposes toward Russia and perhaps drive the Russians to take up arms against the Allies.

The Japanese Government, apparently actuated by a regard for the American position, did not carry out its desire, and since then the Germans have had

Four Enemy Airplanes Downed in Raiding Southeast England

LONDON, Monday, May 20.—Four German airplanes were brought down during a raid made by an enemy squadron of considerable size on Southeastern England late last night and this morning. The raiders crossed into Essex and Kent about 11 o'clock, moving toward London.

An official bulletin, issued at 3 o'clock this morning, says:

Reports show that four of the enemy airplanes which raided London and the southeast last night have been brought down.

The raid appears to have been on a large scale. A considerable number of bombs were dropped.

No details of casualties or damage are yet available.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 19.—In front of the American sector in Lorraine the Germans have for a considerable distance ceased to hold the first line trenches in force, but keep their men for the most part in the second and third line trenches.

The first lines are held for observation purposes and very lightly. This explains why in several recent raids the Americans have penetrated the Germans' first lines only to find none of the foe about.

This step is believed to have been taken by the Germans to insure better protection against our fire. The withdrawal of many men from the first line trenches also decreases the danger from our snipers. In many cases the real German first lines are several kilometers from our first lines.

The German infantry and artillery have been exceptionally quiet opposite our sectors for the past two weeks. However, the good weather has brought about extra aerial activity on both sides. The German flyers are staying back of the lines generally, as is shown by the fact that most of the fights in which the Americans engage are behind the German front.

Since the Selcheprey affair the Germans seem to be content to let well enough alone along our sectors.

The artillery fire has been almost negligible on the Toul front for several days. On two days in succession the Germans sent over fewer than a hundred shells.

2 MONTHS' SHORTAGE CONFRONTS GERMANS

Failure of Ukraine and Rumania Help Is Now Known, and Complaints Are Rising.

AMSTERDAM, May 19.—The reduction of the bread ration in Germany calls forth a great deal of comment in the press. It is pointed out that the expectations with regard to supplies from Ukraine and Rumania are far from fulfilled. The quantity of cereals from Rumania appears to be a couple of hundred thousand tons short, while the Berliner Tageblatt says that no more than 1,852 tons have been received to date from Ukraine.

Two months lie between Germany and the new harvest, so that there are eight lean weeks ahead. General complaint is made that the reductions are not accompanied by an increase of the meat ration, as was done last year, and that the substitutes promised do not give full compensation.

The Berlin Vorwärts asserts that the potato and bread rations are in such small quantities that the reduction becomes a great danger, all the more serious because the physical and moral strength of the people for enduring hardships has declined and they are less able to bear a reduction than was the case last year or the year before.

Though some papers find relief in the fact that the potato ration is not to be reduced, the Vorwärts thinks it "disgraceful that the people of the great cities should go every Sunday to beg potatoes in the country and then smuggle them to their homes." Several papers assert that the profiteering has a good deal to do with the shortages.

The milk ration in Berlin is reduced from today.

A heated debate took place in the Berlin City Council on Friday regarding the coal scarcity. One speaker said that the people had been shamefully deceived by promises, that the state of affairs was scandalous, that people waited in lines all night and then got nothing, and that many coal merchants had had no coal for a month past.

COUNT PLUNKETT ARRESTED

Seized Leaders Are Taken to England—More Prisoners Reaching Dublin.

By CHARLES N. WHEELER.
Copyright, 1918, by The Chicago Tribune Company.

DUBLIN, May 19.—Edward Shortt, the new Chief Secretary for Ireland, the first act of whose régime is the bagging of the Sinn Fein leaders, granted me a private interview in Dublin Castle this evening. After explaining the general situation and his own attitude, he dictated the following, which I read over to him afterward to be sure that no mistake had been made:

"You may quote me as stating without reservation that the arrests of the Sinn Fein leaders have no connection whatever with domestic policies in Ireland, and no connection with the question of conscription or any other local question, and are in no way aimed at the anti-conscription movement in Ireland.

"We know that the Germans are looking upon Ireland as a good field to which to divert the military efforts of Great Britain from the western front and are seeking that, not only by stirring up domestic strife as they are doing, but by preparing to land a force to assist in the rebellion they hope to incite.

"We are quite satisfied that the number of Irish traitors is very small, and it is against them and against them alone that the strong measures of the Government have been taken."

Shortt is a Liberal member of Parliament from an English division and voted against conscription for Ireland. He is now in the trying position of solving the Irish muddle and at the same time putting in operation some form of recruiting. The general opinion of inside circles here is that Shortt has a sympathetic attitude toward Ireland, and desires to abate the bitter enmities existing between two peoples, but is determined at all hazards to stamp out whatever German influences there are in Ireland first. This is given as the explanation of the vigorous rounding up of Sinn Fein leaders.

People, when the first news of the arrests were gleaned early in the morning, were much depressed, and construed the move as the first step in an iron rule of suppression for Ireland under the new régime. They are now urged, however, to suspend judgment pending the publication of further details.

I understand that much of the alleged evidence in support of the German plot was gathered in the United States and will be released in Washington at once.

I am told officially that practically all the important arrests have been made in all sections of Ireland and that subsequent arrests will be only few.

DUBLIN, May 19.—Between twenty-five and thirty leaders from various parts of Ireland have been put on board an Admiralty vessel at Kingstown to be taken to England. Large batches of prisoners are arriving from the country. Dublin is quiet.

LONDON, May 19.—A vessel carrying seventy-three Sinn Fein prisoners left Kingstown last evening, says a Dublin dispatch to the Central News Agency. It is understood that the ship is proceeding to Holyhead, Wales. A large crowd cheered as the ship departed, but the demonstrators were dispersed quietly.

Another Dublin dispatch states that Count Plunkett, member of Parliament for Roscommon, was arrested there last night.

American Troops with Haig Rounding into Shape; Officers Delighted with Their Keenness.

HEADQUARTERS OF AMERICAN TROOPS WITH BRITISH FORCES IN FRANCE, May 17, (Associated Press.)—The American troops are putting finishing touches to their preparations for active fighting, behind the British line in a beautiful rolling country which resembles Western New York in full bloom. The Americans started this morning on manoeuvres, in which they took their first long hike in heavy marching order under a broiling sun.

After six hours the troops were still full of go when the correspondent encountered a long line of infantry resting in the shade of a hedge. Some were footsore, but the operations were going on to the satisfaction of the officers.

"They have covered a good deal of ground before, but it was cool," said the Colonel in command. "This is their first trial under heat, and they are standing it well."

The men are pictures of health and appear to be trained to the hour for hard fighting. All were in good humor, even those with blistered feet.

"Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here!" called one who, outdistanced by his company, came limping alone down the dusty road under a heavy pack.

Besides manoeuvres and regular exercises the Americans are being coached to the last minute in British schools in all the tactics of modern warfare. The commandant of one of these schools told The Associated Press that they were keen and quick to learn.

All over the region where Americans are billeted along with the British there are evidences of how well the troops of the two allies are getting on together. This feeling is displayed everywhere they meet, and it will aid in the success of the amalgamation of the forces.

AMERICANS CHECK 3 GERMAN ATTACKS

Pershing Reports Picardy and Lorraine Raids Repulsed, with Loss to Enemy.

THREE AIRPLANES DOWNED

Rickenbacker, Peterson, and Chambers the Victors in Combats Against Odds.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19. — General Pershing cabled tonight to the War Department the statement that American forces had repulsed three German raids on the Picardy and Lorraine fronts, and that three more enemy airplanes had been disposed of by the group of American aviators who distinguished themselves last week.

The General's statement gave details of Lieutenant Eddie Rickenbacker's bringing down of an airplane last night after narrowly escaping an accident himself. Rickenbacker was flying at the high altitude of 5,000 meters when he was pursued by a German machine of the Albatross type. A second hostile machine came between them. Rickenbacker's airplane struck the tail of the second machine, taking it off and forcing the enemy down out of control.

Captain Peterson, who was credited with having brought down two German machines on May 15, attacked and brought down a German two-seater yesterday, and Lieutenant Chambers engaged two hostile machines, one of which fell.

The report was made public by the War Department tonight as follows:

Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces,
May 19, 1918.

Section A—In Picardy and in Lorraine hostile raids were repulsed with loss to the enemy in killed and wounded. In the Woevre there was continued aerial activity, our planes engaging successfully in several encounters.

Section B—Early this morning in the Lorraine sector a strong enemy patrol of twenty to twenty-five men attempted a raid on one of our advanced positions. The raid was a complete failure, and the enemy in retreating left one of their number dead in our trench.

Last evening north of Toul Lieutenant Rickenbacker, flying at 5,000 meters, was pursuing an Albatross type plane when a second machine came between them. Lieutenant Rickenbacker struck the tail of the second machine, taking it off, and apparently forcing the hostile plane down out of control. Although his own machine was badly damaged he succeeded in returning safely to his own lines.

At about the same time Captain Peterson attacked a two-seated machine signaled to him in the vicinity of St. Mihiel. The enemy machine descended, apparently failing in a nose dive.

Lieutenant Chambers at about the same time engaged two hostile machines, of which one was seen to fall. The other was pursued without result.

RATIONS FRANCE TO FEED OUR MEN

Boret's Meatless Days Insure Plenty for Americans, as Well as Poilus.

SAYS AMERICA MUST HURRY

Minister Urges Rushing Forces to Release French Soldiers for the Harvest.

PARIS, May 18.—Victor Boret, the French Food Minister, was asked by The Associated Press today what effect the first three meatless days, terminating yesterday, had upon the situation in France. He replied:

"It means that our and your brave boys at the front will henceforth receive all the meat necessary to strengthen them for the arduous task of beating the Germans. It is an expression of French gratitude to America for the restrictions imposed on the American people and the desire to show that French civilians are willing and eager to make similar sacrifices.

"Complete returns," the Minister continued, "have not yet been received; but, judging from the figures sent in from the Paris, Seine, and outlying districts, I can say that the threatening crisis has been safely passed. The savings in meat in the last three days will enable me to breathe more easily and to feel sure that the fighting men at the front will want for nothing."

M. Boret explained that France had been under a handicap owing to the lack of refrigerating warehouses and cars, and said:

"It is more a difficulty of transportation than a lack of meat itself which caused the meatless day measures to be taken."

When informed that a report was being spread in some quarters that the meatless days were made necessary because of the purchase of French cattle for consumption by American soldiers, the Minister exclaimed: "That is an absolute falsehood!"

M. Boret paid a high tribute to the American officers and men, saying:

"They are men of wonderful physique, bright intellectually, and accustomed to substantial food. They spend an immense amount of energy, and they require the best foods. They are sober, and their digestive organs have not been impaired by the use of alcohol. Therefore, especially at the ports of entry, French cattle were purchased for the American Army, but that has nothing whatever to do with the present measures, which should have been taken long ago."

The Minister pointed out that before the war France had produced 90 per cent. of the wheat necessary for French requirements, and that last year the production reached only 30 per cent.

"The 60 per cent. had to be made up by importations, intensification of production and restrictions. That was when the bread card was instituted with good results. But tell them in America that I must have men for the coming harvest.

"America must hurry and send men to relieve our old classes in the trenches, so that they may be brought back to the farms to reap the harvest; for what use is it to intensify and increase the sowing if hands are lacking to harvest it, and the crops are left rotting in the field? What France needs is farm help for July and August.

"The Allies should be grateful to two men after victory has been obtained," M. Boret went on. "First, to the general who leads the soldiers to win the decisive battle, and second, to Herbert Hoover, who rendered it possible for the soldiers to eat so that they might fight.

"I am trying to aid Hoover in his task in America. I am unwilling that Americans should restrict themselves in the use of foodstuffs so as to export them

HAIG'S MEN WIN SWIFTLY

Village North of Morlancourt is Carried Quickly in Darkness.

VICTORS' LOSSES LIGHT

Twenty Machine Guns Among the Spoils—Successful Raids Elsewhere.

ENEMY FAILS AT BETHUNE

Repulsed Before Reaching the British Lines—Artillery Active in Various Sectors.

LONDON, May 19.—The village of Ville-sur-Ancre, north of Morlancourt, [on the front northeast of Amiens,] has been retaken by the British as the result of an attack carried out last night by Australian troops, who captured 360 Germans and 20 machine guns at slight cost to themselves.

Field Marshal Haig reports a successful raid today on a German post southwest of Meteren and raids netting a few prisoners and four machine guns yesterday in the neighborhood of Albert and Hamel.

For the rest, today's operations were confined to reciprocal artillery actions in the different sectors.

The night bulletin says:

A local operation during the night at Ville-sur-Ancre [Ville-sous-Corbie] was completely successful. Australian troops carried the German positions in and around the village, which is now in our possession, and captured 360 prisoners and 20 machine guns. Our casualties were light.

We carried out successfully a raid today on a hostile post southwest of Meteren and inflicted casualties on the garrison.

On the remainder of the front there was only artillery activity on both sides in the different sectors.

Following is the text of the afternoon report:

A minor enterprise was successfully undertaken by us last night in the neighborhood of Ville-sur-Ancre, northwest of Morlancourt. Our positions in this locality have been improved, and a number of prisoners and machine guns have been captured by our troops.

Successful raids in which we captured a few prisoners and four machine guns were carried out by us also northwest of Albert and in the neighborhood of Hamel.

A raid attempted by the enemy northwest of Bethune was repulsed by our fire before reaching our lines.

In aerial fighting yesterday twenty-one German airplanes were destroyed and two disabled by British aviators.

The statement on aerial operations issued tonight reads:

Saturday was another fine day and enabled us to carry out bombing, reconnoitring, photography, and fighting. The improved visibility facilitated more work in conjunction with the artillery than has been possible recently. The railway stations at Courtrai, Valenciennes, Roulers, and Chaulnes were bombed heavily and several enemy airdromes, ammunition dumps, and billets also were attacked. Over nineteen tons of bombs were dropped on these targets.

The greater part of the fighting occurred well east of the enemy lines. Twenty-one hostile machines were brought down and two others were disabled. Eight of ours are missing.

Although our bombing machines were only to work half the night, owing to a thick mist which blew in from the sea, they dropped ten tons of bombs on the Marcoing, Haubourdin, Douai, and Chaulnes railway stations, on billets in the neighborhood of Bapaume and Bray, and on the Solway Works and lock gates at Zeebrugge. One of our machines failed to return.

GERMAN BATTERIES SHELLED.

Berlin Reports Heavy British Gunfire Between Arras and Albert.

BERLIN, May 19, (via London.)—The official communication from General Headquarters says:

West of Hulluch the British attacked with several companies, but were repulsed with heavy losses.

Between Arras and Albert the enemy was especially active, and our batteries here were many times subjected to a violent fire.

Elsewhere the infantry activity was limited to reconnoissances.

There was lively firing activity on the battlefront, which continued until early morning, diminished later, and only revived toward evening.

The evening official report from General Headquarters says:

On the southern bank of the Ancre British local attacks sanguinarily collapsed.

HOW BRITAIN FIGHTS WITH SUBMARINES

Wriggle Through Mine Fields and Sink German Vessels in Their Harbors.

40 WARSHIPS TORPEDOED

Operations Even Extended Into the Baltic—Typical Examples of Efficiency, Officially Reported.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The world knows the story of Britain's fleets—the simple tale of the gaunt gray fighting hulks that swing ceaselessly in circles from the arctic down to Ostend, barring effectively the egress from German ports of naval merchant shipping. Only the U-boats and an occasional raider have been successful in slipping through the steel cordon.

Although much has been told about the high seas fleets, but little has been written—and less officially disclosed—about England's efficient submarine navy. However, there has been received by the Committee on Public Information an official British statement, made public with the approbation of the Admiralty, telling in detailed form of the exploits of Britons in combating Germany with her favorite weapon.

Leaving the home harbors on England's east coast, or perhaps dropping down some Scottish firth, the submarines slip into the gray waters of the North Sea and pick their way through German mine fields so that they may battle with the enemy even within the confines of his own harbors.

One of the most popular tales of the exploits of British submarines, which, however, is not contained in the prepared statement, deals with a young commander who audaciously crept through mine-infested waters into the very harbor of Heligoland, the German Gibraltar. As he allowed his periscope to show above the surface for an instant he caught a glimpse of an enemy U-boat riding awash while the crew, lined up on deck, smiled a greeting to the crowds on shore and aboard harbor shipping who were noisily welcoming the "heroes" returning from a raid on the Atlantic. A torpedo from the British craft summarily cut short the celebration and eliminated the U-boat as a future menace to allied vessels. The brilliant phase of the achievement is the fact that the English vessel succeeded in escaping and returning to port unharmed.

Besides detailing various engagements in which British submarines have accounted for one or more enemy war vessels—it is stated that more than forty German warships have been attacked successfully—the review tells of the hardships incident to patrols in bad weather.

"Winter a cold, clammy chill pervades the submarine, and at times the thermometer drops so low that the crew find it difficult to sleep. Spray freezes several inches thick on the wireless antennae, rendering radio communication impossible, while the periscope becomes useless at times because of a heavy mantle.

"The submarine rides very heavily in a sea way, and an even keel is difficult to maintain even many fathoms below the surface. When running on top for the purpose of replenishing the supply of electric motive power, the ventilators must be kept open, with the result that water is shipped in heavy quantities.

How much respect for the British undersea navy is entertained in Germany is told best in the official narrative, which runs as follows:

Some Typical Attacks.

"Venturesome as the enemy is with his U-boats, he rarely allows his above-water craft beyond the confines of his harbors. He well knows that our submarines are ever on the prowl for him, and how vigilant and thorough is the watch kept may be gathered from the fact that though so few opportunities are afforded them our submarines have successfully attacked no less than forty enemy warships.

"Night and day the search is continued, according as circumstances may dictate. The watch is kept on the surface, or submerged save for the periscope, or maybe the vessels are on the dictate. The watch is kept on the surface every now and again to scan the horizon for any hostile craft which may come within reach.

"A ship being sighted, the submarine dives to the attack. As the ship is probably steaming fast on a zig-zag course, a long time may elapse before the submarine is in a favorable position to fire her torpedoes. While this is going on she must ascertain whether the ship is friend or foe, and at all costs she must avoid being seen. If the periscope is sighted the hostile ship will make off with all speed, and the odds are that she will get away. An irregular course and great speed make her a difficult target, and if the sea is smooth she may see the track of the torpedo fired at her and steer to avoid it. But, in spite of all the difficulties, the submarines manage to drive home their attacks and a few of the successes may be here recorded.

"While patrolling between the Eastern Ems and the Weser River a submarine sighted two lots of destroyer smoke to the southeastward. Two anxious hours were spent manoeuvring for position to attack, and then, at a range of 500 yards two torpedoes were fired one at the bow and one at the stern, of one of the destroyers. Having fired the torpedoes the submarine dived to avoid being detected, but a loud explosion told without doubt that one of the torpedoes had reached its mark. Eight minutes later the destroyer was seen sinking by the stern, fifteen feet of her bows still standing vertically out of the water.

"The other destroyer was seen steaming at varying speeds and distances around the wreck. Elated at the success, the submarine thirsted to put her down, too, but as two more destroyers had arrived on the scene and were systematically searching, it was not considered feasible to continue the attack.

"On another occasion two armed auxiliaries were sighted in the Heligoland Bight, and the leader, the larger of the two, was attacked and torpedoed, and was seen to be sinking by the stern.

"It frequently happens that a submarine does not actually see her victim struck, but she invariably has the satisfaction of hearing the explosion if the torpedo gets home. This was the experience of a submarine which, patrolling one morning off the Ems, sighted an enemy destroyer, and fired both tubes at a range of 350 yards. As the submarine dived on firing the result was not seen, but after the lapse of a few seconds there was an exceedingly loud explosion, which was distinctly heard twenty-five miles away.

"A quick sweep around with the periscope two or three minutes later revealed no sign of the destroyer which had been fired at, but 400 yards astern was another vessel of the same kind. As the destroyer was not actually seen to be hit, at first it appeared likely that in reality there was only one enemy vessel, but after the bearings and distances had been carefully worked out this did not seem to have been possible. In view of the violence of the explosion, it is probable that the magazine blew up, and that would account for the rapid disappearance of the ship.

"Yet another instance of the total disappearance of the ship may be cited. One of our submarines located an enemy submarine ahead of her, and, giving chase, reduced the range to 400 yards. Two torpedoes were fired, and one was seen to hit. When the smoke cleared away there was not a vestige of the hostile vessel to be seen.

"These are but a few of the many instances which could be quoted showing the silent and stealthy work of the submarine.

Operations in Heligoland Bight.

"For submarine operations to succeed it is necessary to take the enemy by surprise, and for that reason their work is a hidden mystery and their movements wrapped in obscurity. The following extracts from an official report of operations in the Heligoland Bight lift for a moment the veil of secrecy and afford a glimpse into the life of one of these craft:

"'When a submarine is submerged, her Captain alone is able to see what is taking place. The success of the enterprise, and the safety of the vessel depend on his skill and nerve and the prompt, precise execution of his orders by the officers and men under his command.

"'Our submarines have been pioneers in waters which have been mined. They have been subjected to skilful and well thought out anti-submarine tactics by a highly trained and determined enemy, attacked by gunfire and torpedo, driven to lie at a great depth to preserve battery power, hunted for hours at a time by the hostile torpedo craft, and at times forced to dive under our own warships to avoid interfering with their movements.

"'Sudden alterations of course and depth, the swish of propellers overhead, and the concussion of bursting shells give an indication to the crew of the risks to which they are being exposed, and it speaks well for the morale of these young officers and men, and their gallant faith in their Captains that they have invariably carried out their duties quietly, keenly, and confidently under conditions that might well have tried the most hardened veteran.

"'The hardships undergone during stormy weather are terrible. During the Winter months westerly gales were frequently experienced in the Bight, and these gales were invariably accompanied by high, steep seas, which made it impossible to open the conning tower hatch. Vision was limited to that through the periscope, and was only a cable or two between the seas, which continually broke over them.

"'There was no rest at the bottom, even at 22 fathoms, as the vessels rolled and bumped dangerously. They were consequently compelled to keep under way at a depth clear of the keels of possible ships. When battery power became low the submarine had perforce to come to the surface to recharge. While on the surface it was essential to run the engines in order to keep head to sea, and through the ventilator, which, with the engines running, must necessarily be kept open, much water was shipped.

"'The seamen got very little sleep owing to cold. With these words the Captain of the submarine concludes his report on a cruise in the North Sea. It is characteristic of the service that he should make no reference to the fact that, while the crew had got very little sleep, he had got infinitely less himself.

"'The weather had not been good, and throughout the six days the cold had been intense, arctic in fact. At times ice formed on the periscope very quickly and obscured vision so that it had to be dipped every five minutes. On the surface the thermometer gave no reading, though it had a minimum of 18 degrees of frost. To receive messages by wireless was impossible, for the spray frose on the aerial, forming a coating of ice two inches thick.

"'From time to time it was necessary to dive to remove the icicles, which, over a foot long, depended from portions of the superstructure. The bridge screen froze like a board, and only with difficulty could it be folded, and the ice on the coats of the officers and crew did not thaw until some hours after the garments had been hung up below.'

"Four battleships of the Kaiser class were sighted by a submarine which was patrolling off the Danish coast. Probably there were other vessels in company, but owing to low visibility they were not seen. After getting into position to attack the submarine broke surface owing to the heavy swell, and it was necessary to go full speed to get her under again.

"Just before the periscope dipped sights were got on to the third ship in the line, and four torpedoes were fired. The range was estimated at 4,000 yards. Two loud explosions were heard, and the commanding officer of the submarine was of the opinion that the third and fourth ships in the line were each hit by a torpedo.

"As the submarine was about to rise to observe the results of the shots a destroyer was heard to pass very close overhead, and after that she was continually harassed by destroyers. Two depth charges exploded in close proximity to her, and a sweep was distinctly heard to drag over her hull. For two hours the destroyers searched diligently for her, but without success.

Attempt to Reach the Baltic.

"Some failures may be described as more glorious than victories, and the attempt of a submarine to pass through the Sound into the Baltic is surely one of these, replete as it is with pluck and persistence.

"It was known that the German fleet was exercising in the Baltic, and three submarines, X, Y, and Z, were detailed to make the passage of the Sound and attack. It was essential that the three vessels should pass through the Sound the same night, but unfortunately X developed certain defects and was unable to keep up with the other two. The result was that she reached the entrance to the Sound the night after Y and Z had successfully made the passage. Their presence was discovered in the Baltic and the enemy took all possible steps to prevent either their getting out of the Baltic or others getting in.

"What X found was four merchant ships in line abreast proceeding through the narrow entrance to the sound, and from the accurate station they kept it was evident they were sweeping. Beyond them were destroyers. These ships were all showing navigation lights, and, accordingly, X. thought it would be best to do so, too, hoping to pass without attracting attention.

"She had not proceeded far before she was detected by a destroyer, which tried to ram her. Her only course was to dive, and as she sank in the water she heard the threshing of the enemy's propellers above her.

"To make the passage with lights burning was clearly out of the question, and, nothing daunted, she returned, silently and stealthily creeping on the surface, until she got into the wake of a vessel proceeding through the sound, trusting to be able to follow her unobserved.

"For awhile it seemed as if the plan would succeed, but suddenly the vessel she was following stopped. As luck would have it she was a destroyer, which at once endeavored to ram her. Again she dived.

"A third and a fourth attempt brought no greater success. The enemy, thoroughly alarmed, were ever on the alert to ram her. Another effort would not only have been hopeless, but would have unjustifiably risked the boat and the lives of the crew, so she returned to her base, as her gallant commander expressed it in his report, 'prior to making a further attempt.'

"The enemy, however, is up to many tricks, and his innocent looking decoy ships have been known to give a submarine a sharp surprise. On one occasion the submarine sighted what appeared to be a merchantman and gave chase, showing the signal, 'Stop engines' and 'Send a boat.'

"When the submarine had closed to about a mile, the steamer hoisted the German naval ensign and opened fire with six-inch guns, at the same time increasing speed and altering course so as to ram the submarine. At the time the submarine gun was manned, the signals were still flying, and there were altogether twelve men on the deck, but she just managed to dive in time. Two or three minutes later two loud explosions were heard overhead. Beyond shaking the boat violently, they did no damage.

"From time to time instances occur of encounters between our submarines and those of the enemy, which prove inconclusive. After many hours of dead-reckoning a submarine cannot be very sure of her position, and in one such encounter a British submarine thought for some time that her adversary, which was approximately end on, was her consort out of station.

"Realising her mistake, she dived at once, but before she could pick up the German in her periscope the latter dived. Under the circumstances 'stalemate' was practically inevitable, and after an hour and a half, during which they simultaneously rose and simultaneously dived again, each manoeuvring for a favorable position for attack, the German retired out of the area."

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

While the situation in the West remains at a standstill, Germany is far from idle in Russia. Having put her political fences on the Austrian border in good condition, as indicated by the conference between the two Emperors, Germany is pressing matters in the Ukraine and in Lithuania almost to their elastic limit. There is a vein of sardonic humor in the situation with Lithuania. In response to the Bolshevist dictrine of no annexations and no indemnities, the Lithuanians made peace, acting as an independent state. The whole theory was peace at any price, and the Russian provinces, some of which have since become States in name at least, declared for peace on this basis. But this was not quite what Germany wanted. She, therefore, twisted this independence of the new States and their new peace to mean an alliance with the Central Powers, so that they might remove from German shoulders some of the burden of carrying on the war.

In so far as the question of finance is concerned, this is of more importance after the war than at present. But there are other questions of immediate interest, since they bear directly on the war itself. One of these, of course, is the question of food. There does not appear to be any prospect that the food situation of the Central Powers will be immediately ameliorated as a result of the collapse of the Russian States. There is abundant evidence that both Germany and Austria are bitterly disappointed at the small amount of food which was found available. There was good reason to expect much more. Russia has to a large extent been cut off from the outside world for many months, and in the ordinary course of events there should have been great reservoirs of food stored up because of inability to ship it out of the country. But evidently agriculture had been completely neglected, so that the amount acquired was relatively insignificant. Germany, alarmed at the prospect of the effect of previous promises to the civilian population, has therefore pressed the situation in the Ukraine so as to force the resumption of agriculture, so that her armies may be properly fed. This may prove a boomerang later on; at the same time, viewed from the standpoint of the present, it creates a most unsatisfactory condition for the Allies.

Another point to consider is that of man-power. It is extremely doubtful whether Germany can get any of the Russians to fight in her army without the application of the iron hand. At the same time, the majority of the Russians are not Bolsheviki. They are more or less conservative, and are willing to back any power which will give them stability of Government. If Germany can restore order, this element, although it has no liking for Germany, and would be glad of the opportunity to turn to someone else, will find that there is no one else who can stabilize the situation. Germany's methods of action are, of course, peculiar to herself. Although at peace she wages war when it suits her convenience. Although she has made a treaty and signed it with due ceremony, if there is anything which she desires to insert afterward she does so without going through the formality of consulting the wishes of the other party. If there is anything she wants she takes it, regardless of any existing prior rights. But the result is the same, a military Government supported by the might of German arms exerted against a demobilised and powerless State. If, therefore, Germany wishes men, not to fight perhaps, although this may come later, but for agriculture or for work in manufacturing, they are hers to take.

Economically Germany is obtaining a grip on Russia that it will be most difficult to break, even in the case of complete victory of the Allies on the battlefield. Russian industries, now idle and unproductive, are being sold at bargain prices to German interests, so that whichever way the war goes German money will have paid the price and will hold the property. Gradually there is being constructed in Russia a new German State which it will be difficult, if not impossible, to divorce from the Russian State when peace is declared. As a war measure it means the gradual mobilization of Russia in German interests, giving Germany a wealth of materials to draw from which in every way will rival that of the Allies, including America. This, of course, cannot be accomplished overnight. It is a matter of time, backed up continually with a show of military force. Germany has neither the time nor the men to bring this about by a process of peaceful penetration. It must be done quickly or not at all. Therefore she is compelled to keep in Russia many divisions of troops in order that there may be a proper show of force present whenever it is needed. This need is practically continuous as things stand now. There has been bitter resentment in many quarters at the way Germany has handled the situation. German rule as at present manifested is acquiesced in only as a matter of necessity. Once this necessity is removed the resentment will take tangible form. For this reason military forces must be retained in the conquered provinces. With this situation before them the Allies must make some countermove. Perhaps in the newly made Japanese-Chinese alliance we have seen the first step.

ITALIANS FIGHTING ALONG WHOLE FRONT

Successful Raids Made on Austrian Positions and Foe's Attacks Repulsed.

ROME, May 19.—The War Office communication issued today says:

There has been considerable local fighting along the whole of the front. On the southwest slopes of Monte Mantello, north of Corno Tresegnori, we completely stopped an attempted enemy attack. In the Adamello district strong hostile detachments attacked our outposts south of Mount Stabiet. Our troops resisted bravely and, successfully supported by artillery, repulsed the enemy, who was compelled to retire, leaving hundreds of dead and wounded.

In the Val Giudicaria we attacked and dispersed the garrison of a hostile outpost on the southeastern slope of Mount Noxzolo, capturing prisoners and material.

North of Monte Grappa our assault troops stormed the Casatasson Ridge, inflicting casualties and taking a few prisoners.

In the Val Arsa and on the Asiago Plateau there has been increased artillery activity by both sides.

The aircraft activity has been considerable along the whole of the front. A kite balloon and four enemy machines were downed by two British aviators.

JOFFRE URGED MOVE TO SAVE RUSSIA

No Action on His Plan to Use Japanese, for Fear of Alarming Russians.

DANGERS HAVE GROWN SINCE

What Returning Americans Tell of Military and Political Tendencies in Other War Countries.

In the opinion of some of the best known Allied military and Government officials, according to information which has reached here through returning Americans, the situation on the western front may yet reach a deadlock which will cost the Entente millions of men and billions of dollars to break unless immediate action is taken to stop the German progress in Russia.

Nine months ago Marshal Joffre, who planned, three weeks in advance, the battle of the Marne that saved France, urged the Allies to send into Russia an expedition led by the Japanese with a mandate to all loyal men in that country to join in organizing a stable Government and driving the Germans out. He pointed out that while the Japanese were political realists rather than idealists, the Japanese Government scrupulously and honorably kept its treaties in spirit and in letter and if Japan bound herself in advance to retire from Russia after the Germans had been expelled she could be trusted to keep her word. If on the other hand Germany was permitted to have her own way unmolested, she would quickly succeed in getting full control of the country because the people of the better class had grown weary of continual anarchy and bloodshed, and would be glad to welcome any power, even Germany, which would restore order.

Germany's Growing Power.

Germany, the Marshal is said to have pointed out, would extend her sway into Siberia and gain possession of the vast coal, oil and mineral lands of that region until she reached Harbin. Then, she could easily afford to offer Japan the territory along the Pacific and a free hand in China, in which case Japanese commercial interests might succeed in forcing the making of a treaty with Germany because it would clearly be to their interest to do so. The western front would remain in a state of deadlock and Germany would practically have won the war. Many French and military experts who are not pessimists believe that it may be the Spring of 1920 before the Allies are ready for an offensive strong enough to drive the Germans back to the lines they occupied before March 21 this year, and if the enemy should by any chance succeed in breaking through to Calais or Boulogne, then at least five more years of war may be expected.

The opponents of Marshal Joffre's first suggestion to send Japanese into Siberia contended that this would be dangerous because the Russians would not trust Japan. President Wilson's opposition put an end to this plan. Now, however, it is being contended both in England and France that some action must be taken without delay, and the objections first raised could be met by sending into Russia a joint expedition composed of American, French, British, and Japanese troops with a guarantee from all the Allies to the Russian people that their rights would be respected. Germany, according to the belief now prevalent abroad, is likely to restore the Russian monarchy at any time by placing one of the Grand Dukes, probably Paulovitch Dimetrieff, on the throne.

Daring German Spies.

A returning American, who has recently been behind the battlefront, told a TIMES reporter that the German system of communicating with their spies inside the British lines during the first days of the Picardy offensive was remarkably effective. A Belgian cook in one camp warned some of the noncommissioned officers that they had better get out before midnight because he knew the Germans would be there by that time. The prediction proved to be correct, but the cook did not live to boast about it because he was shot at dawn as a spy.

On March 22 four German spies disguised as British staff officers by some means procured a British military car and drove through Bray, Corbie, and other towns on the road to Amiens, warning the French inhabitants to get out with their effects because the German troops were advancing rapidly. Their object was to get the people stirred up so that they would leave their homes and block the roads, thus hampering British and French movements of troops and artillery. For two days these four spies operated successfully, even deceiving soldiers on sentry duty at the bridges. Then they were caught and dealt with.

Spies are shot at dawn by the Allies. In order to prevent collusion or sympathy among the soldiers in the firing party the rifles are all loaded by a Sergeant and given to them at the last moment. Some have blank cartridges and others are loaded with ball, so that when the order to fire is given the soldiers are unable to tell who fired the fatal shots. There is no secrecy about the executions, time not permitting the firing party to search for a secluded nook, and human life is so cheap that the troops in the vicinity pay little attention to what is going on.

In the first rush of the German offensive, according to this American, the British were overwhelmed by the superiority of numbers. The Germans came on in such hordes that it was impossible to stem the rush. At one point the enemy advanced in twelve distinct waves. They were mowed down by machine gun and rifle fire at twenty yards range as if by a reaper. The dead and wounded fell in heaps outside a barbed wire fence six feet high until the survivors were able to walk across the bodies and continue the attack. So swift was the advance that surgeons were operating at the casualty clearing stations while the Germans were shelling the hospital and there was great difficulty in moving the wounded.

When Maricourt was abandoned there was no means of communicating with headquarters, and a number of wounded sent there afterward were bayoneted on their stretchers by the Huns in the presence of some slightly wounded officers and men belonging to a Highland regiment who managed to get away. One of the soldiers saw his own brother thus killed. The main roads were shelled every ten yards by the German artillery, and the refugees from Maricourt, Bray, and Corbie had to escape through by roads and narrow lanes which were so jammed that progress was almost impossible. French farmers driving country carts loaded with household goods and the children on top were coming from all directions, the women walking behind driving cows and geese before them. The engineers left the last bridge until the refugees had passed, and then blew it up to block the German advance.

Canadian officers thought it not improbable that the British might retire from Ypres, as they did from Passchendaele, to avoid useless sacrifice of life and straighten the line. Even then the Germans, they said, would still be in difficulties, as they were hemmed in by the marshy land on the salient bordered by the Oise, Ancre, and the Somme, are exposed to constant aerial attacks by the Allies, and have great difficulty in maintaining their supply lines. If they are held in check until September, it was predicted the German Government will again offer peace terms expressing willingness to give way on most points in dispute in return for a free hand in Russia.

BAKU IN FLAMES AS BATTLE RAGES

2,000 Killed and 3,000 Wounded in Struggle Between Russians and Mussulmans.

MOSCOW, May 19, (Associated Press.)—Mussulmans and Bolshevist forces are engaged in a deadly conflict at Baku, on the Caspian Sea.

According to dispatches to the Moscow newspapers 2,000 persons have been killed and 3,000 wounded.

Various parts of the town, including entire streets and the Persian bazaar, are burning.

TAKES STEP TO RAISE ARMY.

Moscow Government to Hold Council Presidents Responsible.

LONDON, May 19.—The Russian Government, according to a wireless statement from Petrograd, has sent to all the provincial councils a notice complaining of their failure to take the necessary steps ordered for the creation of a Red Army to defend the councils of the republic against internal and external enemies.

Accompanying the notice was a new decree ordering that measures be taken within a week, in accordance with the decree of April 8. Responsibility for strict compliance with this order will fall upon the Presidents of the respective councils.

SECRET EXPLANATION TO GERMAN PRESS

Government Tells Truth About Ukraine Conditions—Now Disclaims "Bread Peace."

MOSCOW, May 12, (Associated Press.)—The Smolny Press Bureau publishes a secret circular addressed by the German Government to the German newspapers explaining that the idea of peace with Ukraine being a question of bread is quite erroneous, and that, on the contrary, the German Commissioners have convinced themselves of a dearth of cereals in Ukraine owing to insufficient sowings and the fact that the small property owners have buried their grain. The circular adds:

"The peasants, who are nearly all armed, are hostile to Germany, and commercial relations therefore are nonexistent. It is possible, however, that in the course of our present and subsequent advance greater supplies may be discovered, and that by armed forces better results may be obtained. In any case the hoped-for improvement of our food supplies is exceedingly problematical."

The German Wireless Press of May 17 announces that in view of uncertainty concerning supplies from Ukraine the bread ration will be reduced from 200 to 160 grams, from June 16.

MENACE BRITISH ON TIGRIS.

Turkish Forces in Persia Advancing on Enzeli, Occupy Two Towns.

MOSCOW, May 11, (Associated Press.)—Turkish regulars and Kurds, advancing in Persia, have occupied Soujbulak and Ushnu, south of Lake Urmia, according to newspaper dispatches from Tiflis.

A dispatch from Tabriz says that the Turkish objective is Enzeli, which will become the central base from which the British will be menaced in Mesopotamia.

CHANCE TO BRING RUSSIA INTO WAR

ample opportunity to make headway in influencing sentiment for Germany in Siberia. The recent order of the Central Bolshevist authority that the stores at Vladivostok should be sent to Russia was attributed to German suggestion or coercion.

The attitude of the United States has produced a deadlock in the proposal that the Allies should take some action to bring Russia back as a nation and as a factor in the war. Since then things have gone from bad to worse in Russia. People are starving, even in Petrograd, and the situation is such that many are likely to turn to the authority that gives them relief from their distress.

National Spirit Reviving.

But the Russian national spirit has shown signs of coming back, and has been emphasized by the high-handed manner in which the Germans have violated their treaty obligations with both the Bolsheviki and the Ukrainians, as witness the arrest of the Ukrainian Ministers and members of the Central Rada. Under these conditions it is felt that the certain failure of any ill-considered military effort of the Allies in support of the Bolshevist Government would mean that Russians generally would turn to Germany to give relief, while careful handling of the situation would afford a basis for the re-establishment of Russian nationality and ultimate Russian assistance in the defeat of the Central Powers.

In his speech at the Metropolitan Opera House last night the President said:

"I am here to stand by Russia as well as France."

Whether this means that the President contemplates action that will help restore Russian nationality is not known, and it is doubtful that there will be any immediate enlightenment for the public, as there is no one authorized to interpret what the President says. It is likely, however, that the President's remark will be used as a means of reviving interest in the Russian situation, and may afford the basis for consideration by the United States, Japan, and the Entente of a plan that will help Russia and her former associates in the war against Germany.

Even among those most anxious that something be done to take advantage of the opportunity the feeling is strong that there must be thorough accord between all the allied nations before any step is made. This would mean that Great Britain, France, and Japan, in their desire to use military means at once to combat German influence in Russian territory, would show consideration for the doubts of the United States as expressed in its communication in regard to the Japanese suggestion that troops be sent into Siberia. A way to overcome the difficulty may be found in the suggestion that any military expedition should be an allied expedition, in which all the allied Governments would be represented, but with the only purpose of the expedition to help the Russian people establish order and authority as a preliminary to the formation of a national government.

Joint Expedition Suggestion.

It is generally recognized here that to re-establish themselves nationally the Russians must have some rallying point. They have not found it in the Bolshevist Government, which is backed by a comparatively small percentage of the people. They might look with suspicion on a purely military allied movement unless its purpose were clearly understood to be unselfish, and it is in this connection that the suggestion is likely to be considered that an allied civil commission should be sent to Russia by way of Siberia, with armed forces of Great Britain, France, Japan, the United States and perhaps Italy, merely incidental for its protection and the support of the Russian authority that it would seek to place in power. All the allied Governments would be represented in the commission, which would be headed by some man of international prominence known to many of the Russian people as a friend of democracy.

The present interest of Great Britain and France in the Russian situation appears to centre around bringing Russia back as a military factor through the encouragement that would be given by sending allied armed forces into Russian territory to assist in resisting German aggression. The interest of the United States is mainly in establishing democracy in Russia. If these two purposes could be amalgamated so as to prove to the United States that an allied military expedition could be so conducted as to bring the approval of the Russian people themselves, a step forward in the rehabilitation of Russia and the assistance of the new nation in helping the Allies in the war might be brought about according to opinion in some well informed quarters.

CHURCHES TO AID RUSSIA.

All Denominations to Join in Work of Rehabilitation.

President Wilson's announcement that the United States Government will stand by Russia is a part of a world program which the churches of the Entente share, and concerning which the President is said to have been consulted. A call was issued yesterday for a Protestant conference to be held in Chicago at the end of June to consider what steps are to be taken by American churches to stand by and help Russia to rebuild its religious and social affairs after the war. Baptists meeting at Atlantic City this week will lead in the movement, and Presbyterians in session at Columbus this week will also act.

The Catholic Church of the West has already announced, through Vatican advices, that it is ready to do all it can to rebuild Russia and work with President Wilson. The Church of England and the Episcopal Church in this country, together with the Lutherans of Sweden and Finland, which have Bishops and claim Catholic orders, have also announced their purpose to help Russia.

ACTION BY THE ALLIES URGED.

New World War Predicted Unless the Present One Frees Russia.

LONDON, May 19.—Concluding a long review of the present political situation in the East, The Sunday Observer says:

"If the Central Powers could secure peace on their present basis their subsequent position would be by no means an easy one. Nevertheless, that position would mean sooner or later a new world war. It is life and death for all the allies to secure in this war the reconstruction of a free Russian federation as powerful as was the Czardom.

"Several things are necessary. First, a fuller organisation of India, which now is going on.

"Second, a firm touch with those strong elements in Russia which are anti-German to death, however socialistic and revolutionary.

"Third, President Wilson's attention to the burning appeals of men like Savinkoff, Bourtseff, and Kerensky, if he is indeed at hand.

"Fourth, some action by Japan. If the Allies could not secure a move by this latter great power as a mandatary acting under a proclamation of disinterestedness their collective diplomacy would seem to be a feeble agency."

PRUSSIAN SOLDIERS INSIST ON SUFFRAGE

Letters from Trenches Show Trouble Likely if Reform Is Definitely Defeated.

AMSTERDAM, May 19.—Letters from the front recently appearing in small German provincial papers promise exciting times should suffrage reform be definitely defeated. Count von Spee, who recently in the Prussian House of Deputies, when advocating the shelving of the bill, represented himself to be speaking in the name of those at the front, gets a severe dressing down.

One letter says: "It is arrant impertinence to say that the men in the trenches do not bother abot the suffrage."

Others write: "Wait until we get home. We will see that we get our rights," or in similar terms.

The letters indicate that the determination is pretty general to make sure, first, that the destinies of the home lands shall not be placed in the hands of war profiteers and slackers, and, second, that if they are spared they want to come home to an adequately filled cupboard, reasonable prospects of employment, and no public charity, or they will know the reason why.

HITCH IN CHINESE DEAL WITH JAPAN

Peking Insists on Limitation Period for Proposed Military Convention.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, May 19.—The negotiations between China and Japan have not been submitted to the Cabinet for approval. It is understood that a hitch has occurred owing to Chinese insistence on a limitation period for the military convention. The Japanese loan of $20,000,000 has so far not been paid.

After the fall of Chang-to, in Western Hunan, the rebels threatened Changsha, but the remnants of the Government forces, together with reinforcements, assembled and defeated them. Therefore Chang-sha is again safe.

The Secretary of the Cabinet informed me today that there was no danger of Lung Chi-kwang, the leader of the Government forces in Kwangtung, being expelled from that province. He has 20,000 troops. The rebel activities from Se Chuan are not taken seriously.

The Government wishes to deal liberally with the southern parliamentarians, but is forced to fight the rebels until they acknowledge the authority of Peking.

RUSSIAN CITIES STARVING.

Bread Ration in Petrograd Said to be Totally Exhausted.

MOSCOW, May 11, (Associated Press.)—The food situation in Petrograd and other large cities of Russia instead of improving with the advent of Spring and river navigation is constantly growing worse.

The bread ration in Petrograd, which had been one-eighth of a pound weekly, now is totally exhausted. Other products are scarce.

In Moscow the food situation is somewhat better. The bread ration is a quarter of a pound and other food is obtainable at high prices. Sugar is scarce.

Conditions in the country generally do not promise an improvement in the food situation in the near future.

IRISH HERE CALL FOR AMERICAN HELP

Sinn Fein Sympathizers Start Move to Bombard Washington with Petitions.

CONVENTION IN AN UPROAR

Threats to Carry Issue Into Politics in This Country and Seek Aid "Anywhere."

The Sinn Fein organizations in this country are going to bombard Washington with petitions in an effort to induce the United States Government to intervene in the Irish situation. This was made known at the second and closing session of the convention of the Friends of Irish Freedom in the Central Opera House, on Sixty-seventh Street, near Third Avenue, yesterday afternoon.

About 1,000 men and women were present and cheered to the echo every denunciation of England. Unlike the session of Saturday, which was to an extent dignified and conservative, yesterday's was noisy and was also openly against Great Britain and all other nations not in sympathy with the Sinn Feis.

The charge was made by several of the speakers that Great Britain had deliberately engineered a plot against the Irish people, which called for the massacre of men, women, and children in Ireland. Two of them intimated in terms which could not be misinterpreted, that unless the United States took a hand in the Anglo-Irish controversy the Administration at Washington would be an accomplice in the plotted assassination of the Irish people.

The speakers included four British subjects, two of them now under indictment in the criminal branch of the Federal District Court of New York; Diarmid Lynch, who was recently deported from Ireland because of his Sinn Fein activities; Supreme Court Justice Daniel F. Cohalan, John Devoy, editor of the Gaelic American, a number of issues of which have recently been excluded from the mails by the Government, and Peter Golden, the last named bringing the crowd shouting to its feet, when he declared that if England "massacres the Irish" in Ireland, "the Government under which we live will have to massacre us."

Threats to Seek Help "Anywhere."

The four British subjects who spoke were Liam Mellows, who is sometimes referred to in Sinn Fein circles as "the general"; Dr. P. H. McCarton, a recently elected member of Parliament; Mrs. H. Sheehy-Skeffington, and Miss Hughes of Canada.

Mellows said that the Irish in America who did not back the Sinn Fein now were a "lot of curs" and that unless the United States intervened on the side of the Sinn Fein "Ireland will be driven to seek help anywhere she can get it." He did not say that he had Germany in mind, but that was what many present interpreted him as trying to convey. Mellows and McCarton are under indictment in the Federal Court charged with attempting to obtain American passports by fraudulent means.

Justice Cohalan made the one conservative speech of the meeting. He urged those present not to lose their heads and went so far as to say that England had just as much right to try to make friends in America as Ireland had. It must be kept in mind, he said, that there were many good Americans who honestly believed that the attitude of the revolutionary element in Ireland was wrong at this time. He said that the proper attitude of the Irish should be one that was neither pro-German nor anti-British, but entirely pro-Irish.

Justice Cohalan's speech was but an incident in a long drawn out session in which not one kind word was uttered in behalf of the allied cause. Statements that the British were committing atrocities in Ireland, that the American newspapers were British controlled, that England was seeking to have American marines landed in Ireland, that every member of Congress who refused to bow to the Sinn Fein propaganda should be defeated next November, and that American troops were to be rushed into the first lines in France in order to release British soldiers to "massacre" in Ireland were cheered long and loudly.

Several times the name of President Wilson was mentioned, but it evoked no demonstration such as that which greeted the heated and excited utterances of most of the speakers.

It was announced in the course of the meeting that some day this week a committee, the Chairman of which is Supreme Court Justice John W. Goff, would go to Washington to seek an audience with President Wilson and submit to him a petition requesting the Government to intervene in the Irish situation. Another committee, which will be composed of women, will go to Washington to file a long petition with the members of the Senate and House of Representatives. The Goff committee will present in addition to the petition approved at Saturday's session of the convention, a set of resolutions adopted yesterday afternoon in which among other things it is stated that "a campaign of calumny and falsehood" is being carried on "by English agents in a portion of the press."

Mellows Creates a Storm.

The convention was called to order at 1 o'clock by the Rev. Thomas J. Hurten of Philadelphia. The session began with the reading of several telegrams, one of them from Victor Herbert, the retiring President of the organization, who telegraphed his regret at being unable to be present. He urged a continuance of the organization's work.

The meeting was just getting under way when a sallow-faced, blond-haired man appeared in the gallery. He was "Gen." Liam Mellows. Immediately the whole house was in an uproar. For fully ten minutes the din lasted. Father Hurten was powerless to restore order. The crowd wanted the "General," and so he descended from the gallery into the pit and on to the stage.

His appearance on the stage was a signal for a renewal of the demonstration, and the noise lasted five minutes more. Finally he started to speak. The impression he created was of a man quite angry.

"We meet," he began, "under the shadow of a terrible and impending disaster in Ireland, and I feel that like Nero we are fiddling while Rome is burning."

"That sure is the truth," a man in the audience said, and the crowd cheered its approval.

"We are talking about our past history in America," the "General" added, "while our people in Ireland are about to be massacred by the British Government. The papers say that 500 Irishmen have been arrested because of the discovery of a German plot in Ireland. That is a lie as false as hell. I say that this thing was plotted two or three months ago, and we are only just at the beginning of it now. We see French sent to Ireland to slaughter defenseless Irish people, so that he can redeem the reputation he lost in France.

"I ask you, are we here in America going to sit down and keep our mouths shut while all this is going on?"

From all over the house came shouts of "No, no."

"The German plot story," continued Mellows, when the uproar had ceased, "was concocted for the purpose of alienating American sympathy, and under the cloak of that prejudice which she hopes to create England expects to do as she pleases in Ireland while the world looks on and laughs.

"The American Government has declared that it entered this war, not for selfish reasons, but for the purpose of freeing the oppressed people of the world, and so far this has been true, but with geographical reservations. If the United States is honest in its declaration, then India, Egypt, Africa, and Ireland should all be included."

Says America Shares Blame.

"This wrong that is going to be done in Ireland is a terrible thing. The forcing of conscription on Ireland is a crime against the whole civilized world, and I say that America by its silence has been, and is still, acquiescing in England's continued domination."

Another noisy demonstration of approval followed this utterance.

"If there is bloodshed in Ireland," Mellows fairly shouted, "and if our men, women, and children are shot down—if there be bloodshed, I say, the blame will rest not alone on the British Government, but also on America, unless America speaks now in behalf of Ireland. By its silence on conscription, and I think the Administration knows the truth, the Administration is condoning the shedding of blood that is to take place in Ireland.

"They say that the Irish are pro-German. I say the Irish people have but one enemy on this earth and that is England, and the Irish are looking outside of England for help, and if the United States refuses help Ireland will be driven to seek help wherever she can get it."

The noisest outburst of the afternoon followed these remarks.

"You people in America," the "General" continued, "are acting like a lot of curs, if you don't speak out now. You can't lie down idly while your people are being slaughtered at home. In Ireland we are not going to sit down.

"Those who say it is treason to speak the truth are not Americans. They are pro-British. Let your Government act for Ireland or stop talking about oppressed peoples. The time to do it is now, or else forces over which we have no control may do so. Even the hand of God may be in it that England may be swept out of Ireland. Thanks to God, the thieving English are going down now."

Tells Irish to Shift Votes.

Mrs. H. Sheehy-Skeffington was the second of the four British subjects to speak. She began by saying that Mellows had left very little for her to say and she indorsed all he had said.

"I was wondering," she said, "if the time will come when American boys will be drafted to massacre in Ireland. You want to take speedy action to see that this does not happen. It is for you to size up the situation and is time for you to act. The time has gone by, I think, for merely respectful petitions, and so on.

"In New York yesterday President Wilson said he was standing by France and Russia, and we are glad to see Russia being helped, for Russia is the only republic that has openly spoken a good word for Ireland. I would venture to point out that Russia has made peace with Germany, yet we have not been informed that the President is pro-German."

Continuing, Mrs. Skeffington said that it was for the Irish in America to influence the Government in Washington, and she suggested as one way of doing it a transfer of the Irish vote from the Democratic to the Republican column. All the Irish resolutions offered in Congress, she said, had been offered by Republicans.

"You are to blame," she said, "if you don't send men to Congress to represent you properly."

When Mrs. Skeffington mentioned the name of Congressman Joseph McLaughlin of Pennsylvania a storm of hisses and "boos" followed from all over the house. Mr. McLaughlin is the President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and is said to disapprove the Sinn Fein policy in Ireland.

"McLaughlin," said Mrs. Skeffington when the hisses had ceased, "has been elected a Representative at Large from Pennsylvania and he has also been elected President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. I suggest that people who elect men of this type are responsible afterward for what these men do. You have got to blacklist these men. Election time is coming and you must watch your Congressman's every move.

"I understand the Irish vote is largely Democratic. Could you not change that next November? Ask the candidates how they stand on Ireland and vote accordingly. I might suggest a delegation to see the President and compel a definite pronouncement on this question for or against Ireland. Silence now is criminal. It is time for the relatives of Irish soldiers and sailors to go to Washington and ask President Wilson what he is going to do about Ireland. If America does not act, then America will be the accomplice in this matter, and will be extending her hand to deal with the assassin of the Irish people."

Mrs. Agnes Newman, sister of the late Sir Roger Casement, who was put to death after he had been landed on Irish soil by the Germans, spoke next. She said she had been shadowed lately by British secret service agents and that a manuscript by Sir Roger had been stolen from her trunk.

Resolutions Ask Government's Help.

John A. Murphy was called upon to read the resolutions which are to be submitted to the President, Congress, Governors of States, and Mayors of the larger cities. The resolutions were adopted. They appeal for "sympathy and support in our efforts to secure action by the President and Congress in favor of the application to Ireland of the President's declarations, which were clearly intended to include all peoples held against their consent under foreign rule."

John Devoy, who seconded the resolutions, spoke at length, and after him came Dr. McCarton, the recently elected Member of Parliament. He said that American soldiers would replace the British in France, while the British shot down the people in Ireland.

"You have been told," he said, "that there is danger of American forces being used in Ireland. The United States Navy is in Irish waters, and England will do all she can to get American marines landed.

"The British may slaughter the Irish people. We are prepared for that. But Ireland will continue to menace the British Empire as long as there is a British Empire, but that won't be long."

Justice Cohalan talked next. When somebody shouted "Our next President" the whole audience shouted its approval of the suggestion.

Miss Hughes, Charles Dolan, Diarmid Hughes, Peter Golden, and John Jerome Rooney were the last speakers. Each spoke about five minutes, and when Mr. Rooney had concluded the convention adjourned.

The Rev. Peter E. Magennis was elected President of the organization for the next year. Justice Goff is one of the new Vice Presidents, and Diarmid Lynch is the new Secretary.

PRAGUE PUTS BAN ON ALL MEETINGS

Celebration with Treasonable Incidents Causes the Authorities to Take Action.

AMSTERDAM, May 19.—A three days' celebration at the Bohemian National Theatre at Prague, according to advices from that city, led to incidents of a treasonable character. The civil authorities and police announced that severe countermeasures would be taken, including the prohibition of meetings and processions.

The wearing of emblems or badges of enemy colors will be severely punished. The closure of the Bohemian National Theatre is threatened in the event of further incidents of the kind.

The newspaper Narodny Listy has been suppressed because, despite official warnings, it continued its subversive propaganda.

ITALIANS COMBAT PROPAGANDA HERE

President Wilson Commends Aims of Roman Legion of America.

MAINTAIN ITALIAN MORALE

Plans Complete for Italy-America Day Celebration—High Prices for Boxes at Concert.

Dr. Antonio Stella of 214 East Sixteenth Street, President of the Roman Legion of America, which is the first organization to start a national movement to bring about patriotic unity and support of the war by Americans of Italian descent, and which has opened national headquarters at 105 Metropolitan Tower, issued a statement yesterday, in which he announced:

"The purpose of the organization is to combat German propaganda among Italians, propaganda aiming to estrange Italy and America, which has been relations for next Friday's celebration, vealed in connection with the prepara- Through this organization every American citizen of Italian extraction, and every Italian resident in the country of whatever station in life, is invited to take part on May 24, the third anniversary of Italy's entrance into the war, in a concerted effort to thwart the Hun's attempt to put Italy out of the war, and thus give the Teuton hordes free access to the Mediterranean and the open ocean."

In reply to a message from Dr. Stella Secretary Tumulty sent this telegram from the White House:

"The President very deeply appreciates the fine sentiments voiced in your telegram in the name of the Roman Legion of America, and he asks me to convey to you and to all those concerned an expression of his cordial thanks. Your generous assurances are most heartening."

To Issue Weekly Bulletins.

The legion proposes to issue weekly bulletins for distribution by mail in connection with a special campaign to be carried on through the aid of the clergy of the country, by which it is expected to reach the Italian laboring people. Branch organizations and societies are expected to cover all sections of the country.

The Italy-America Celebration Committee, of which Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney is chairman, completed arrangements yesterday for the Italy-America Day celebration in the Metropolitan Opera House on Friday night, at which Secretary of War Baker will speak. Mrs. Whitney also made public the list of prominent patrons and patronesses and box holders, some of whom paid upward of $1,000 for reservations. The list includes Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, $500; Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr., $800; Mrs. Harmanus B. Duryea, $1,000; Mrs. John Magee, $1,000; Mrs. Goadby Loew, $800; Mrs. William Payne Thompson, $1,025; Mrs. Ambrose Monnell, $1,000; Mrs. Thomas F. Ryan, $1,000; Mrs. Henry Clay Frick, $500; Mrs. August Heckscher, $800; Mrs. Mortimer L. Schiff, $500; Mrs. Edward N. Breitung, $1,000, (donated box, to be resold;) Mrs. Peter McDonnell, $350; Mrs. Emanuel Gerli, $550; Mrs. William Lanchaire, $1,000; Mme. S. C. Cerebelli, $1,000; Mrs. D. A. Truda, $550; Mrs. Edward Dudley Kenna, $750.

The program, announced at the headquarters of the committee at the Vanderbilt, will include the anthems of all the Allies. Caruso and Scotti will sing one selection, being the duet from Verdi's "Farza del Destine," and Mme. Frances Alda will sing the aria from "Manon Lescaut," and two other selections. Every number on the program is the work of an Italian composer.

It was said that addresses would be made by Henry P. Davison, head of the American Red Cross, who has just returned from the Italian front and knows thoroughly the Red Cross conditions there; Charles E. Hughes, President of the Italy-America Society; Count V. Macchi di Cellere, Italian Ambassador, and Secretary of War Baker.

CAILLAUX PROTESTS DELAY.

Refers to the "Imbecility" of Bolo Pacha's Revelations.

PARIS, May 19.—Ex-Premier Caillaux, who is now in prison awaiting trial by court-martial on a charge of treason, has sent an open letter to his attorney protesting against the delay in bringing his case to trial. He argues that the prosecution has had more than sufficient time to conclude its investigations, and he demands that he be brought before the court-martial at once or be released. The ex-Premier says:

"The imbecility of the so-called revelations of a man while under death sentence has been established. I have been a prisoner four months. I don't complain. I merely state the facts."

This is the first time the official publication of Bolo Pacha's eleventh hour revelation has been referred to in any way by M. Caillaux. The Government has refrained from mentioning the names of persons whom Bolo Pacha attempted to incriminate before he was executed.

to France when they can be obtained here. I am trying to save tonnage so that American soldiers may be brought here with greater rapidity.

"I have lived through days of anguish," M. Boret concluded, "but the horizon is clearing. The time has passed when I am worried as to what the soldiers might have to eat three or four days hence. But I am tired; I am going away tonight to spend the week-end somewhere in France, and when I return on Monday I shall prepare measures which I shall present to the Council of Ministers on Tuesday, fixing the maximum prices for fish and other commodities to replace meat."

Just then the telephone bell rang. Answering the call M. Boret said:

"Put 300 grammes of bread in my grip with two bread tickets, a pound of cheese, ten lumps of sugar and a package of chocolate." These instructions he was giving to his servant.

"One must not transgress one's regulations," the Minister explained to the correspondent as he escorted him to the door.

ITALY'S AGREEMENT WITH JUGOSLAVS

Alliance Against Austria Said to be One of Its Basic Considerations.

LARGE CONCESSION BY ROME

Belief Here That This Development Is Embodied in New Treaty With Entente Allies.

The new treaty which, according to a statement published yesterday by The Manchester Guardian, has been concluded between Italy and her allies to replace the agreement of April, 1915, under which Italy went into the war, is believed in Jugoslav circles here to embody in definite form the results of the recent agreement between Italy and the Jugoslavs inhabiting the Adriatic provinces of Austria-Hungary.

The exact terms of the agreement, which was confirmed at the Conference of Oppressed Austrian Nationalities held in Rome early in April, have not been worked out yet in entire detail, the spirit of both sides being strongly against endangering the newly won harmony by possibilities of conflict over details. Much of the matter in dispute may not be finally settled till after the peace treaty.

But according to Professor Pietro Silva, who recently discussed the agreement in The New Europe, the basic considerations were alliance of the two nations against Austria; recognition by Italy of the right of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes to a united and independent national State, to be united with Serbia and Montenegro at the pleasure of its people; recognition by the Jugoslavs of Italy's right to the districts where the Italians are in a majority, this comprising Gorizia, Trieste, and the western half of the Istrian peninsula, together with certain islands off the Dalmatian coast; the constitution of the ports of Fiume and Zara as free cities, and the recognition by each nation of the rights of freedom of culture and judicial equality of Italian minorities in Slav territory and Slav minorities in Italian territory. All disputed questions are to be settled by arbitration.

The treaty of April, 1915, was dictated by the necissity of getting Italy into the war on the side of the Entente; and in Italy by the necessity of bringing the extreme imperialists to the side of the liberals and irredentists who formed the centre of the war party, as well as by fear of foreign consequences.

Premier Orlando has lately defended this treaty under the circumstances of those days; for Russia was still imperial, America was not in the war, and even the free nations had to consider strategic guarantees of security.

At that time the agitations in the Jugoslav provinces had not attained its present form of practically unanimous demand for complete separation from Austria and unity with Serbia, and there was a party in Italian public opinion which doubted if the whole movement were not supported by the Hapsburgs to counteract Italian ambitions. At the same time there was fear that if Italy did not obtain the eastern shore of the Adriatic after defeat of the Central Powers Russian influence, through Serbia or otherwise, would dominate there and would give Italy another militaristic and imperialistic neighbor. So the treaty, the substance of which was known at the time, but which was not published in full until Trotsky gave it to the world from the Russian archives last January, gave Italy very wide liberty of annexation in the Jugoslav provinces, including nearly all of Dalmatia.

A natural reaction of this was to make the Jugoslav troops in the Austrian Army fight hard against the Italians, although they usually surrendered in battalions when opposed to the Russians or the Serbs. In the last year, however, Italian public opinion has undergone a distinct change of heart, and in her new treaty, it is understood, has receded from extreme demands.

SOP TO CROATS A RUSE.

Austria Seeks to Set Backfire Against Southern Slav Movement.

Recent cable dispatches telling of the proposal to unite with Croatia-Slavonia, which now enjoys a very limited measure of autonomy under the Magyar crown, Dalmatia, at present a province of Austria but inhabited by Serbo-Croats, are elucidated by extracts from Southern Slav papers sent to this country by the Serbian Press Bureau of Geneva.

The object was apparently to set a backfire against the Southern Slav movement for the unification of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes with Serbia and Montenegro by trying to make concessions to the Croats alone. There was a tendency to promise some sort of reconstitution of the old kingdom of Croatia, united personally with the Magyar crown, the rights of which have been overriden in more recent times by the Magyars, the object being apparently to isolate the Slovenes further up the Adriatic, work up antagonism between the Catholic Croats and the orthodox Serbs, and thus break up the Jugoslav movement.

The leaders of the national movement in Croatia are anxious lest the populace, provoked by the Government's machinations and by the general starvations, should rise at a time when any revolt would easily be put down and would only result in useless slaughter. The local authorities have been doing their best to maintain a sort of working relation with the national Government to ameliorate conditions so far as possible, in order to prevent popular dissatisfaction from rising to the flash point.

Newport Man Wins War Cross.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 19.—Word came today from France that Lieutenant J. Stacy Brown, Jr., U. S. A., of Newport, has won the French War Cross for courage and gallant conduct in action and repelling a raiding party. Lieutenant Brown was a member of the Harvard tennis team several years ago.

CITES SOUTH AFRICA AS EXAMPLE TO IRISH

exception, and it was the aim of the British Empire to solve the Irish problem as it had solved the problem in South Africa. Ireland did not need any peace conference to have her wrongs righted, General Smuts added. He advised her to go to the highest Court of Appeal in the empire—the Imperial Conference.

General Smuts said that the British policy of freedom and liberty had resulted wondrously for South Africa, where a new nation was being built up. The armies of his native country, consisting of Briton and Boer, had captured in the war more German territory than all the other armies of all the Allies together.

"They have swept the German flag from the whole of the African continent," the speaker continued, "and on the battlefields of France, they have distinguished themselves in a way which has appealed to the whole British Empire and the world."

General Smuts said that he was sure it was the mission of the Empire which had solved the case of South Africa to solve the dreary case of Ireland.

SAYS IRISH PLOTTING MENACES AMERICA

Endangers Our Transports, London Paper Asserts—Predicts Federal Home Rule.

LONDON, May 19.—The Observer, commenting on the Irish situation, says:

"A brave step has been taken in Ireland for grave reasons. Friday morning Professor Valera, President of the Sinn Fein Party, and many other extremists of the same organization were arrested.

"The reason is that these avowed separatists and pro-Germans have once more been in treasonable touch with the enemy despite the leniency with which they were treated after the last Dublin outbreak, revolt and sabotage. The reality and seriousness of this pro-German plot has been known for some time. In view of Admiral von Capelle's assertion that Germany is assured for years to come of a steady supply of U-boats which never cease their efforts to get in touch with the Sinn Feiners and separatists, this repeated treason must be put down with an unflinching hand and prevented from recurring.

"Americans, with their inborn abhorrence of disloyal anarchism, have hitherto dealt more harshly with pro-German conspirators than we have dealt with them on this side of the Atlantic. Nevertheless, an organized Nationalist attempt is being made to mislead and prejudice American opinion with regard to the whole Irish situation. This attempt will undoubtedly be continued unless it is met with stern and cool discrimination across the Atlantic. It can only help to serve Germany's game in the nick of Germany's time.

Attacks Dillon Manifesto.

"John Dillon, the Irish Nationalist leader, and his friends have made themselves responsible for a malevolent manifesto. It asserts that the British Government is not sincere in its intentions with regard to the Home Rule bill, and that British policy is failing in its promise to Ireland.

"These assertions are without truth. They are either devoid of knowledge, or scruple, or spring from that almost irradicable habit of passionate misrepresentation which in every crisis plays its perverse, bitter part in defeating the efforts of the best friends of Ireland to do her good. The Nationalists could have made Ireland one, happy and self-governed, long ago had they the nerve, courage, and sense enough to embrace their full duty on the side of the Allies and repudiate the Sinn Fein.

"We hope that President Wilson and the people of the United States will not be misled by John Dillon's manifesto. We hope they will set themselves fully to understand what the British policy in Ireland really is. It is a plain thing and an honest thing and is the only thing compatible, on the one side, with the war interests of the Allies, while, on the other side, tending steadily to reconcile two breeds and creeds. Without that, Ireland, in wasting and barren agitation, will plunge from one unsettlement to another and there will be no health in her.

"The policy of the Lloyd George government is threefold. It is, first to restore the normal order of the civilized society; second, to apply gradually equal military service, as in England, Scotland, and Wales; third, to bring in the Home Rule bill.

Fighting "Advocates of Chaos."

"For these purposes, Lord French, a famous soldier, proud of his Irish blood, and Edward Shortt, a Liberal, and both home rule advocates, have gone to Ireland as Lord Lieutenant and Chief Secretary. Their primary purpose is to govern. It is to grapple with the separatists, the enemies of all efforts at an Irish settlement and those who are advocates of chaos.

"That is an awkward crux for John Dillon. He knows it and to cover himself on the issue he does something else. He actually tries in advance to wreck the Home Rule bill before it can be introduced. He tries to weaken its chances in advance to prejudice the whole political atmosphere against it.

"He suggests that there is no sincere effort to bring it forward. That is not true. He suggests that there is no honest intention to frame it for the best interests of an Irish settlement. That is not true. He suggests that the delay in bringing it forward is malicious because it is avoidable. That is not true.

"What is John Dillon's own position and, what is behind his manifesto to America? He is, of course, nominally for the war, but he will not lift an effective finger to help it. He and his fellows unconditionally resist the principle of conscription, though that is a matter of Federal policy and unquestionably within the sole competence of the Imperial Parliament on this side of the Atlantic as in that of Congress on the other side. Can the President and the people of the United States imagine any situation in which any body of Americans in a crisis like this would refuse equal service and defy Congress?

"On these matters of fact, which are absolutely within our knowledge, we have here made three assertions. We beg all America to note it. We urge them to discourage sophisticated partisan rhetoric contrary to fact and deeply disadvantageous to every purpose of constructive good-will on which Ireland's happier future depends. And we say that the true danger is that the Nationalists of Ireland are proving Ireland's worst enemies, partly through obsolete passions lingering from a bygone age and partly through tactical politics, ambiguity, and weakness.

Appeals to President Wilson.

"When Mr. Wilson receives the Nationalists' representatives, will he ask them what they are doing to help? Will he ask them why, if they repudiate the Sinn Fein and disclaim the devil, they hold so many candles to the devil? Will he ask them what they are doing to conciliate Protestantism in the North of Ireland, whence President Wilson derives his origin, and to draw breeds and creeds together to make a nation, which without that must be forever unmade?

"John Dillon and his friends are only adding so far to every single difficulty of the situation.

"While the Lloyd George Government, on the one hand, has to face stubborn opposition from the Irish Unionists to any form of Home Rule, because they believe it would be bad for their country and are strengthened in that belief by all the recent lawlessness and disloyalty, on the other hand, the Cabinet gets no constructive assistance whatever from the Nationalist advocates of self-government. Not in the impracticable temper which the Nationalists are now showing—a temper equally impracticable both on conscription and Home Rule—could the American Constitution have ever been framed or a settlement reached in South Africa.

Old Home Rule Plan Discarded.

"The preparation of the Home Rule bill is in active progress. Time is required that it may be framed with wise and liberal statesmanship. That is the sole reason for the delay which John Dillon seeks to misrepresent.

"The former bill, by admission now universal, was not merely bad, but it was unworkable. Its provisions must be entirely recast in the new measure. Again, it is certain that a Federal system of Home Rule will have to be applied to the whole United Kingdom. Otherwise, the whole legislative machine will break down utterly, and the enormous tasks of reconstruction after the war can never be efficiently carried on.

"That reconstruction must involve every single interest of social, economic, and political concern. The Imperial Parliament cannot do it all, if it is to attend well after the war to wider affairs of the British Commonwealth, and to its proper part in the immense, interknitted transactions that must involve the whole world after the war.

"The British Ministry must have a certain time in which to restore political security in Ireland, to frame its Home Rule bill, to create a cooler atmosphere, and to advance steadily toward equal service.

"The Nationalists will be confronted with the responsibility of modifying their attitude or proving that they are incredible wreckers of the whole comprehensive policy which alone can make Ireland one. Fair play for Great Britain and her government is necessary.

Troop Transports Endangered.

"This matter is as much to America's own interests as ours. The pro-German conspiracy in Ireland endangers in obvious ways the safety of American transports. We are confident that the Government will have the support of the American people in putting an end, as far as Sinn Fein plotting is concerned, to a state of things which President Wilson would not tolerate for a day.

"We are equally confident that the millions of American sympathizers with Ireland will credit the English policy toward that country with those qualities which, (even by admission by the Radical press,) Austen Chamberlain's speech showed the other day—the large-minded outlook, the spirit of high-minded justice, and the unswerving good faith on Home Rule. It is lamentable that John Dillon's manifesto contains not one hint of constructive temper and sagacity."

Q. What is an Administrator?

A. When no Will is left, the estate of the deceased must be divided in accordance with the law. The surrogate appoints an individual—chosen from the next of kin—to settle the estate. The appointee is called an Administrator. The Administrator may or may not be a person whom the deceased would have chosen. That contingency can be avoided by making a will and naming the Columbia Trust Company or an individual to carry out its provisions. The one so named is called an Executor.

RIDING TO THE FRONT WITH OUR GUNNERS

Americans, Passing Through Cheering Crowds, Throw Money to Children.

HOW ONE MAN GOT THERE

Artillery Captain Won France Instead of Honolulu by the Fall of a Coin.

By FLOYD P. GIBBONS.

Copyright, 1918, by the Chicago Tribune Company.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES UNDER GENERAL FOCH, May 19.—I rode out from the old positions with the guns and boarded a troop train which brought our battery by devious routes to changes of scenery gratifying both to the vision and the spirit. In our cars we lived on tinned meat and hard bread washed down with swallows of vin ordinaire, hurriedly purchased at the station buvettes. The horses rode as well.

Officers and men, none of us cared for the train schedule, for the simple reason that none of us knew where we were going, and there was little time wasted in conjecture. Soldierly curiosity was satisfied with the knowledge that we were on our way, and with this satisfaction the hours passed easily. In fact, the blackjack game in the officers' compartment had reached a point where the battery commander had garnered almost all of the French paper money in sight when our train passed slowly through the environs of Paris.

Other American troop trains had preceded us, because where the railroad embankment ran close and parallel to the street of some nameless faubourg our appearance was met with cheers and cries from a welcoming regiment of Paris street gamins who trotted beside the slow-moving troop train and shouted and threw their hats and wooden shoes in the air. Sous, 10-centime pieces, franc-pieces showered from the side doors of the horse cars as the American soldiers, with a typical disregard for the value of money, pitched coin after coin to the scrambling mob of children. At least 100 francs must have been cast upon those happy, romping waves of childish faces and upstretched dirty hands.

"A soldier would give his shirt away," said a platoon commander, leaning from the window and watching the spectacle and surreptitiously pitching a few coins himself.

"Hope we get out of this place before the men pitch a gun or a horse to that bunch. Happy little devils, aren't they? It's great to think we're on our way to meet their daddies."

Unnumbered hours more passed merrily in the troop train before we were shunted onto the siding of a little town. The work of unloading was started and completed within an hour. Guns and wagons were unloaded on ways, while the animals were removed from the cars on movable runways or ramps. As each gun or wagon reached the ground its drivers hitched in the horses and moved it away. Five minutes later we rode out of the yards and down the main street of the town.

Women Beg for Buttons.

The broad tires on the carriages of the "heavies" bumped and rumbled over the clean cobbles, and horses pranced spryly to get the kinks out of their legs, long fatigued from the vibrations of the train. Women, old and young, lined the curbs, smiling, throwing kisses, waving handkerchiefs, aprons, begging for souvenirs. If every request for a button had been complied with our battery would have reached the front with a shocking shortage of safety pins.

Darkness came on, with a fine rain, as we cleared the town and halted on a level plain between soft fields of tender new wheat which the horses sensed and snorted to get at. In twenty minutes Mess Sergeant Kelley from his high altar on a rolling kitchen, announced that the last of the hot coffee had been dispensed. Somewhere up ahead in the darkness bugle notes conveyed orders to prepare to mount and move. With a rattle of equipment and the application of endearing epithets, which the horses unfortunately didn't understand, we moved off at the sound of "Forward."

Off on our left a passenger train slid silently across the rim of the valley, blue, dimmed lights in its coach windows glowing like a row of wet sulphur matches. Far off in the north flutters of white light flashed in the night sky, and the occasional rumbling of distant guns gave us the first impression of battle or battles. Every man in our battery tingled with a thrill. This was riding frontward with guns, this was rolling and rumbling on through the night up toward the glare and glamor of war. I was riding beside a Captain at the head of the column. He broke the silence:

The Story of an Exchange.

"It seems like a far cry from Honolulu, with the moon playing through the palm trees on the beach," he said quizzically, "to this place and these scenes and events tonight; but a little thing like the flip of a coin decided it for me, and I'm blessing that coin tonight.

"A year ago in January, before we came into the war, I was stationed at San Antonio. Another officer friend of mine was stationed there, and one day he received orders to report for duty in Honolulu. He had a girl in San Antonio and didn't want to leave her, and he knew I didn't have a girl and didn't give a damn when or where I was sent so long as it was with the army. He put the proposition of a mutual exchange, which is permitted under regulations.

"He wanted to take my place in San Antonio and give me his assignment in Honolulu, which I must say looked mighty good in those days to anybody who was tired of Texas. I didn't think then we'd ever come into the war, and, besides, it didn't make much difference to me one way or the other where I went. But instead of accepting the proposition right off the reel I told Jim we'd flip a coin to decide. If it came tails he would go to Honolulu. If it came heads, I would go. We flipped. Tails won. I'm in France, and poor Jim is out there in Honolulu tending the ukulele crop with prospects of having to stay there some time. Poor devil! I got a letter from him last week.

"Do you know a man knows no keener joy in the world than that which I have tonight. Here I am in France at the head of 250 men and horses and guns, and we're rolling up front to kick a dent in history. The poor unfortunate that ain't in this fight has almost got a license to shoot himself. Life knows no keener joy than this."

It was a long speech for our Captain, but his words expressed the feeling of not only our battery, but our whole regiment from the humblest wagon driver up to the Colonel himself—who, by the way, has just made himself most popular with the regiment by being promoted to Brigadier General. The Colonel is passing upward to a higher command, and the regiment is "sore" on losing him. One of his humblest critics has characterized the event as the first rough trick the "old man" ever pulled.

MONTCLAIR FLIER HONORED.

S. T. Jacob and Comrade Win Cross for Aerial Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., May 19.—Word has been received here that Sereno T. Jacob of 49 Park Street, with a companion aviator named Connelly, has won the French War Cross and Palm for exceptional bravery. They shot down in flames a German observation balloon.

Following this exploit, they were attacked by five German planes. The American aviators succeeded in sending two of the German planes to earth and drove off the three others.

PLANE NAMED 'OLD JIMMY.'

Comrades Pay Tribute to Captain Hall, Missing American.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 17, (Associated Press.)—The airplane driven by Captain James Norman Hall, which fell when he was flying within the German lines a few days ago, bore the number "17." Now a new "No. 17" has appeared on the American front northwest of Toul.

Immediately under the pilot's seat, on each side, has been placed the inscription, "Old Jimmy." It is a silent tribute from Captain Hall's flying comrades.

Some of the American flyers have adopted for a mascot a tiny mouse-colored jackass, which comes naturally by the traditional army habit of kicking hard about things he doesn't like. The mascot has a special aversion to airplanes. They frighten him, and he and his heels are kept at a respectful distance from the hangars for the protection of the latter. Some airplanes, incidentally, are now appearing with a crude likeness of the kicking jackass painted on their sides.

14 NEW DESTROYERS NAMED FOR HEROES

"Bill" Anthony, the Famous Marine of the Old Maine, Honored in One of Them.

OTHERS DIED IN OLD WARS

Eleven Were Officers Who Served in the Conflict of 1812, Notably on Lake Erie.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Secretary Daniels to-day announced the names for fourteen more of the new destroyers completed for the use of the American Navy in the campaign against the German U-boat. One of them will be named the Anthony, after "Bill" Anthony, of Spanish War fame, a non-commissioned officer of the Marine Corps, who won a promotion for his conduct in connection with the sinking of the old battleship Maine at Havana, when he reported to Captain Sigsbee, "Sir, I have to report that the ship has blown up and is sinking." The others will be named the McDermot, Laub, McLanahan, Edwards, Ballard, Babbitt, Claxton, Hamilton, Bush, Hopewell, Brooks and Delphy.

The soldierly conduct of Sergeant Major William Anthony, on the occasion of the sinking of the Maine, caused its commanding officer, then Captain Charles D. Sigsbee, later Rear Admiral, to recommend that the Secretary of the Navy make Anthony a sergeant. Commenting on Anthony's conduct, Captain Sigsbee wrote:

"At the time of the explosion, I was in the Captain's cabin of the Maine, which was filled with smoke and an intense darkness. On leaving the cabin I was met near the forward door by Private Anthony, who was coming into the cabin to fulfill, on that dangerous occasion, the precise duties of his position by notifying me of the explosion. He ran against me in the darkness and apologized hastily, then reported to me that the ship had been blown up and was sinking. The splendid feature in the case of this service performed by Private Anthony is that, on an occasion when a man's instinct would lead him to seek safety outside the ship, he started into the superstructure and toward my cabin, irrespective of the danger."

Sergeant Major Anthony was born in Albany, enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1875, and with short intervals between re-enlistments served almost continuously until Jan. 25, 1899.

The McDermot is named after Lieut. Commander David A. McDermot, a native of New York, who was in command of the Cayuga from Dec. 2, 1862, until killed in the Sabine Pass on April 18, 1863.

The Laub is named in memory of Midshipman Henry Laub, at whose death in action Congress expressed deep regret, commended his gallantry, and ordered that a sword be presented to his nearest male relative. Midshipman Laub was born in York, Penn, and served under Commodore Perry. He was wounded in the battle of Lake Erie, Sept. 10, 1813, and carried below, where he was killed instantly by a shot which crashed through the cockpit.

The McLanahan is named for Passed Midshipman Tenant McLanahan, who served on the sloop of war Preble in the Mediterranean Squadron, and on various ships in the Brazil, African, and East Indian Squadrons, from 1840 to 1845. While serving on the Cyane he was one of the party besieged with Lieutenant Heywood. He was killed by a rifle shot in the neck. Captain DuPont, in his report, mentioned McLanahan as "gallant, unflinching, and devoted."

The Edwards is named for Midshipman W. F. Edwards, a native of Virginia, who in 1813, while attached to the Argus, was killed in action with the Pelican.

The Ballard is named for Midshipman Edward J. Ballard, who was wounded in the battle of Lake Erie and was killed in action on June 1, 1813, aboard the Chesapeake while in action with the British ship Shannon.

The Babbitt is named for Lieutenant Fitz-Henry Babbitt, who was killed in action between the British ships of war Endymion and Pomona and the U. S. S. Adams, on Jan. 15, 1815.

The Claxton is named for Midshipman Thomas Claxton, to whose nearest male relative Congress awarded a sword and commended his name "to the recollection and affection of a grateful country and his conduct as an example to future generations." Midshipman Claxton died of wounds on board the Lawrence early in the battle of Lake Erie, in which he displayed great gallantry.

The Hamilton is named for Lieutenant Archibald Hamilton, who was attached to the ship United States, Oct. 25, 1812, and served gallantly in the engagement and capture of the H. B. M. S. Macedonian. He was chosen to bear the flags of capture on that occasion to the Navy Department. He was killed Jan. 15, 1815, on board the President in the action between that vessel and the British ships of war Endymion and Pomona.

The Bush is named for First Lieutenant William S. Bush, of the Marine Corps, who served during the War of 1812 and lost his life Aug. 19, 1812, while aboard the Constitution during its engagement with the British frigate Guerriere.

The Hopewell is named for Midshipman Pollard Hopewell, who served on the Chesapeake and was killed in action June 1, 1813, when that vessel engaged the British frigate Shannon.

The Hatfield is named for Midshipman John Hatfield, who volunteered for duty at Lake Ontario, under Commodore Isaac Chauncey, and was killed in the attack on York, Canada, in the War of 1812.

The Brooks is named for Lieutenant John Brooks, Jr., of the Marine Corps, who was killed in the engagement between the American and British fleets on Lake Erie, Sept. 10, 1813.

The Delphy is named for Midshipman Richard Delphy, who was killed in the fight between the United States ship Argus and the British ship Pelican in August, 1813.

RIDGEWOOD MAN WOUNDED.

Dog Mourned Joseph Linhardt at Time He Was Hurt Abroad.

The War Department yesterday notified Michael Linhardt of 580 Fairview Avenue, Ridgewood, Queens, that his son, Joseph Linhardt, had been seriously wounded in action on April 28. Linhardt, who is 26 years old, was drafted in October, and after a brief period of training at Yaphank went abroad.

According to the elder Linhardt, a pet dog, which the soldier left behind him, began to grow disconsolate at about the time his master was wounded. He refused to eat, and moaned almost incessantly. Finally the Linhardt family was compelled to get rid of the animal.

Linhardt, before became a soldier, was employed as a clerk by the F. W. Wesel Manufacturing Company of Brooklyn.

Relatives of Charles Berger Johnson, 30 years old, of 79 Loraine Street, Brooklyn, learned yesterday that he had been wounded. Johnson was a member of the 18th Infantry. When the summons came from his draft board for him to report to Camp Upton, Johnson, who was a sailor, was in Valparaiso, Chile. Two months later, in Wilmington, N. C., he learned he had been drafted, and he went immediately to Brooklyn by rail.

Johnson was sent to France in January. His father, John Johnson, heard from him last in March. He has two brothers in the service, Edwin Johnson, 23, and Lief Johnson, 21. Both are in the Naval Reserve.

CABRERA SEEKING SHIPS.

Reported Attempt to Buy German Tonnage in Argentina.

BUENOS AIRES, May 19. — Luis Cabrera, Mexican Minister of Finance, who has been in South America since early in the year, has been devoting all his time for the last several weeks to problems of navigation. He has paid visits to several Argentine ports, where he has endeavored to buy or charter steamers.

It is persistently rumored that Señor Cabrera has been trying to purchase German steamers interned in the republic.

A dispatch from Buenos Aires Feb. 23 said that the Argentine Government had canceled arrangements made for chartering a steamer to carry cereals to Mexico, explaining that the tonnage was needed to transport fuel oil from the Argentine fields. The dispatch added that Luis Cabrera hoped to substitute two or three small vessels for the one the charter for which to convey wheat and flour to Mexico was canceled.

The Noise That Annoyed A Boiler-Maker

THE foreman of a boiler-making shop had a report to write. He was given a desk in the office. In ten minutes he was tearing his hair. "I can't stand the noise of that clackety-clack typewriter" he declared. "It keeps me from thinking."

The nerves of this man, accustomed to the resounding noises of the shop, could not stand the penetrating clatter of the ordinary typewriting machine. Its rapid fire "tat-tat" at the rate of 400 and more per minute spelt confusion to both nerve and brain.

Perhaps your ears are dulled to typewriter noise and your brain is not conscious of annoyance. But your nerves feel it. Each slender, sensitive nerve takes up sound waves like the antennae of the wireless—receives every click of the typewriter like a blow. And the endless shock-after-shock must tell in time.

For the sake of your own health and your employes', put in the Noiseless Typewriter. More and better work will result. Things will run more smoothly.

And your letters will look better. Aside from its blessed freedom from noise, the Noiseless does beautiful work. It does not rack itself to pieces. It is durable. It is practical. It is speedy. Its type cannot get dirty or out of alignment. It is a real typewriter.

We'll gladly put the Noiseless in your office for your own stenographer to try. No obligation is involved. Telephone or write.

Broken Feet and Broken Promises

The Chinese, who, the world over, are noted for their truthfulness, kept their promised word and broke their women's feet. Two simple applications of their beliefs.

We do not go quite as far as this pagan practice of breaking children's feet to make them beautiful, though we pay tribute to vanity in less honest forms.

There was no deception in the Chinese practice. A short foot was a beautiful foot, but it passed beyond the limits of usefulness, when broken. We still cling to the idea that we may pinch our toes and remain foot free.

Don't Let Your Children's Feet Shame You

"Right Shape" shoes are not fads or the development of any peculiar idea in orthopaedic science. Just years of honest interest in children's welfare, put into a strong, sensible last, which permits the development of the little foot on the lines nature intended.

W. S. S. War Saving Stamps

Of course, we have all asked ourselves how it could be possible for the Government to make anything toward war expenses from stamps sold through stamp machines, it must pay such a lot for the machines.

It unquestionably does. And unless the returns are counted in the millions and hundred millions, these machines will not pay. But they have a peculiar silent appeal which seems to pluck at the passing elbow, and must have presented themselves in this guise to the authorities. Any scheme depends on the man in the street, for its success. Let's help.

HAVE YOU A SWEETHEART,

Son or Brother in training camps in the American Army or Navy? If so, mail him a package of ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes and sprinkled in the foot-bath. The American, British and French troops use Allen's Foot-Ease, because it takes the Friction from the Shoe and freshens the feet. It is the greatest comforter for tired, aching, tender, swollen feet, and gives relief to corns and bunions.

Sold by all Dealers Allen's Foot-Ease

The Plattsburg Camp Manual advises men in training to shake Foot-Ease in their shoes each morning. Ask your dealer to-day for a 25c. box of Allen's Foot-Ease, and for a 2c. stamp he will mail it for you. What remembrance could be so acceptable?

1,000,000 BELGIANS STRIKE AGAINST FOE

Refuse to Work for the Germans Even When Threatened by Starvation.

KEEPS BACK FIGHTERS

Soldiers Forced to Do Work Behind the Lines Ordinarily Failing to Laboring Men.

BOSTON, May 19.—One of the greatest strikes in the history of the world is now being fought out in Belgium, where 1,000,000 members of labor unions refuse to work for the Germans, even when threatened by starvation, according to Lieutenant Henri de Man of the Belgian Army, a member of the Executive Board of the Belgian Federated Trades, who addressed the Boston Central Labor Union tonight.

"This unyielding refusal to bow to the will of the invaders, even in the face of bribes of wages three and four times those prevailing before the war, has resulted," Lieutenant de Man told the delegates, "in forcing the Germans to keep whole army corps out of the fighting lines to attend to the various tasks behind the lines that ordinarily would fall to the lot of the working classes.

"The people of Belgium have refused to do any of the work or maintain any of the industries since the war started, despite the fact that all kinds of wages are offered. They would rather starve than work for the Germans, and they would starve were it not for the relief that has been sent from here and other places. The food rations that are served are the minimum amount that can be given and keep a person alive."

In one city of 60,000 persons, food was kept out for a week, but when the authorities in charge saw the manner in which the people were slowly dying of starvation without complaint, this order was revoked, as the Germans did not dare allow any more crimes to be piled on them than those of which they were already guilty.

PLAN FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Council of Churches Sends a Message to 60,000 Clergymen.

A Memorial Day message to 60,000 clergymen has been sent by the Federal Council of Churches in America and the General Wartime Commission of the Churches in regard to the observance of Memorial Day and the Sunday preceding. The message follows:

Upon this occasion we shall honor not only the heroes of the past but also those who at this hour are fighting even greater battles in our behalf—battles in which, with God's blessing, we shall win for men and nations the world around the unchallenged exercise of those rights of justice and liberty which our fathers won for us.

With the message go recommendations looking toward a celebration of Memorial Day by each congregation that will bring home to every man, woman and child in it the true meaning of the war. It is recommended that on Memorial Day special arrangements be made for opening the churches for prayer and that, at an hour fixed to insure the attendance of as many of the community as possible, special services be held. To obtain the participation of the entire community in this observance of the day full co-operation is urged by all the churches in the community with other community forces. In conclusion the communication to the churches says:

"It is also suggested that in all churches there should be read the names on the honor rolls of the church and the President's proclamation concerning Memorial Day, and that prayer should be offered for all those in any branch of the country's service, whether military, naval, medical, religious or industrial; for the allied nations, for the peoples against whom we contend, that they may come to seek the true greatness of nations in righteousness and good-will, and for the swift victory of justice and the establishment of righteousness and peace among all the peoples of the earth."

100,000 AT CONEY ISLAND.

Resort Has Its Real Opening, with No Disorder.

Coney Island had its real "opening" yesterday, when more than 100,000 persons journeyed to the shore. The transit facilities were taxed to handle the crowds. Thirty extra policemen were on duty, but they had little to do, as there was no disorder.

There were reports about Coney Island that the extra policemen had been sent to watch enemy aliens and see that they did not pass the "dead line," which has been designated as Surf Avenue. The police, however, made no attempt to single out possible enemy aliens.

OPPOSES RIVETING RECORDS

Bethlehem Manager Says They Cause Waste of Workers' Time.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 19.—S. Anderson, General Manager of the Bethlehem Steel Company's Shipbuilding Yards, Marine Department, at Sparrow's Point, is opposed to further efforts on the part of his men to break the existing rivet-driving record now held by Charles Knight, a negro. He says that many hours and the labor of hundreds of men are lost by attempts to break records.

"Knight could break his own record tomorrow if I'd let him," said Mr. Anderson, "but I'm not going to let him. The other men leave their jobs by the scores watch the performance and there's no way to stop them. By breaking records we lose time at building ships."

The manager suggests that a prize be offered to the man driving the most rivets in six months. This would tend to speed the work.

ENTERTAIN GEN. BELL.

Stage Folk Give Performance in Honor of Camp Upton Commander.

CAMP UPTON, N. Y., May 19.—The largest audience the Liberty Theatre ever held attended the entertainment given tonight by Private Irving Berlin in honor of General Bell. More than seventy actors came from New York in a special train and were given a reception at the officers' club and dined at the barracks of the cantonment headquarters detachment.

On the bill were the Lee children, of moving picture fame; Harry Fox, Carl Randall, Adele Rowland, who sang a song especially written by Mr. Berlin; the Dooley brothers, Al Jolson, Ann Pennington, Lillian Lorraine and a chorus of girls from the Midnight Frolic; "Frisco" of the Follies, Eddie Cantor, Dorothy Jardon, who sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the "Marseillaise"; the Six Brown Brothers, Fred Stone, Fay Bainter and a chorus of girls, and Will Rogers.

Mr. Berlin, accompanied by the orchestra, six pianos, and a double quartet of soldiers, sang two songs about General Bell. After the last number the entertainers gathered on the stage to hear an address of thanks by the General. He said his men were like the stage folk because both did a great deal of walking and because they never knew where they were going "from here."

The party was accompanied from the city by Mr. and Mrs. Sam H. Harris, Sam Forrest, and Mike Selwyn.

BASEBALL AS WAR TRAINING.

It Makes Our Men Proficient at Bomb Throwing, Pershing Says.

OMAHA, May 19.—Baseball and football have made Americans apt at the war game, General Pershing says in a letter just received by Captain C. E. Adams, former State Commander of the G. A. R. Captain Adams and General Pershing are old friends.

"The avidity with which American soldiers are entering into the activities of the war on the battle line is astonishing to European armies," the letter said. "In the matter of grenade and bomb throwing the Americans become proficient in but a few days' drill. I attribute this in part to the American games, football and baseball."

STIRRED BY SOLDIERS' DEEDS

Mrs. Belmont Tells of Fortitude of Our Men in France.

A description of the work of the Red Cross in France and of the life of the American soldiers in the trenches and the billets was given in the Free Synagogue in Carnegie Hall yesterday by Mrs. August Belmont. She related many of the experiences she had in her five months' visit to France last Winter, and she said that after seeing wounded American soldiers come back from the trenches, she had decided that those described as "slackers," because they fail to do their part to aid in carrying on the war, ought to be classed as "murderers," because their efforts are causing the loss of lives by lengthening the war.

Mrs. Belmont said that there were three supreme thrills for the visitor to France, thrills that awakened in every visitor an admiration for the spirit of the American armies. One was the sight of American soldiers marching to the trenches singing and unafraid; one was the courage and silence of the American soldiers who were brought back wounded; and the other was the sight of maimed American soldiers in the hospitals, singing "The Star-Spangled Banner" and struggling to stand at attention whenever a band in the courtyard played the national anthem.

GET SLACKERS IN RAID.

250 Found on East Side Must Answer as Delinquents.

Assistant District Attorney James A. Smith raided a dozen places on the east side yesterday, including a hotel and two Turkish baths, in a quest for draft delinquents. About 800 men were found, and of these 250 were served with subpoenas to appear at the office of the District Attorney this morning for examination. Twenty-five other persons, including one woman, were held in $500 bail each as material witnesses.

Mr. Smith was accompanied on the raids by Inspector Robinson, acting Captain Donovan, twenty-five detectives from the First Inspection District, and several members of the Vice Squad. Most of the places raided were Chinese restaurants in Second and Third Avenues, Delancey, East Thirteenth, and East Fourteenth Streets. Ninety-four men in one of the bath houses were unable to produce registration cards.

CALL FOR RADIO STUDENTS.

Major Sanctuary Wants Recruits for Signal Corps School.

Major E. N. Sanctuary has telegraphed the Central Recruiting Bureau of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense that he would like to meet by appointment several hundred young men who are willing to enter the Signal Corps Radio Schools at once. Men of draft age not in the current quota are eligible. The minimum education is a high school, or equivalent. College men are particularly desirable.

Major Sanctuary will be at the Recruiting Bureau, Room 615, Hall of Records Building tomorrow at 10 A. M. Men desiring to take advantage of this call would do well to fill out the blanks today which may be had by applying to the Mayor's Committee.

Argentina Burns Corn; Can't Ship It

BUENOS AIRES, May 19.—The highest quality of maize grown in Argentina for many years is being burned today as fuel in the industries of the country. The scarcity of shipping prevents the sale of the maize at profitable prices. The crop this year was a bumper one owing to the Government's exhortations to the people to till their land. Maize is now selling at $15.30 gold per ton for use as fuel.

MAY CLEAR UP GEM THEFTS.

Young Negress Suspected of Robbing Riverside Drive Homes.

Lillian Lee, 17 years old, a negro woman of 42 West 136th Street, was locked up yesterday morning at the West 133d Street Station, charged with grand larceny. The police say that the arrest may clear up a number of robberies in Riverside Drive and the upper west side. The Lee girl, the police charge, answered a number of newspaper advertisements calling for servants. After staying a short time she would disappear with valuables. The thefts became so numerous that Acting Captain Richard McKenna decided to insert a number of "servant girl" advertisements and posted men at the houses named.

Yesterday morning detectives were watching at an apartment at 42 West Seventy-seventh Street, where the Lee girl came in response to an advertisement. The girl was arrested, and later identified at the Fourth Branch Bureau, according to the police, by Mrs. F. Ballenberg of 548 Riverside Drive as the servant who disappeared from her apartments with $800 worth of jewelry and other articles. Mrs. Ballenberg made the specific charge of grand larceny against the negress. Other homes robbed in a similar manner were those of City Judge James A. Allen, 312 West Eighty-third Street, where a $1,000 diamond ring was stolen, and Mrs. Angus Hopkins of 133 Riverside Drive, where $220 in currency and $000 worth of jewelry was taken. The police recovered the diamond ring, which they say the Lee girl gave to Lester Brown, a negro, of 133 West 133d Street, who was locked up charged with receiving stolen property.

Daughters of Revolution's Service.

The annual memorial service of the Washington Heights Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution was held last night in the Chapel of the Intercession, Broadway and 155th Street. Rev. Marlow H. Gates, rector of the chapel, spoke on the work of women in the war. The meeting was attended by 150 members of the chapter, headed by Mrs. Samuel J. Kramer, President of the chapter.

NEGRO REGIMENT IN ACTION.

Hayward's Command Now on the Battlefront.

A dispatch from France yesterday, stating that two negro soldiers, members of an American infantry regiment, had beaten twenty-four Germans, killing half of them, was the first intimation that the 15th New York Infantry, now the 365th United States, had got into action. The 15th, a New York City regiment composed exclusively of negroes, is commanded by Colonel William D. Hayward, formerly Public Service Commissioner, and was the second unit from this city to reach France.

The regiment was organized two years ago, and for a time had hard work getting recognition by the State. It was the first of the New York National Guard regiments to reach war strength of 2,002, and later when the Government decreed 3,605 as the minimum regimental personnel, the negro outfit was first to reach those figures.

What Our Red Cross Is

The American National Red Cross is, by Act of Congress, the official medium of communication between the people of the United States and their Army and Navy.

The President of the United States is the President of the Red Cross.

The War Department audits its accounts.

The work of the Red Cross for the war period is directed by a War Council created by President Wilson on May 10, 1917.

In a statement announcing the appointment of the War Council, the President said:

"The best way in which to impart the greatest efficiency and energy to the relief work which this war will entail will be to concentrate it in the hands of a single experienced organization which has been recognized by law and by international convention as the public instrumentality for such purposes. Indeed, such a concentration of administrative action in this matter seems to me absolutely necessary, and I hereby earnestly call upon those who can contribute either great sums or small to the alleviation of the suffering and distress which must inevitably arise out of this fight for humanity and democracy, to contribute to the Red Cross."

The Red Cross organization is world-wide

The American Red Cross today is world-wide. It reaches into every American village, and overreaches all national boundaries. There are chapters in our insular territories and in practically every Allied and Neutral country in the world: in Hawaii, the Philippines and Porto Rico, in Cuba and Guatemala, in London and Paris, and the Eastern countries.

A year ago there were 562 chapters in the United States and 486,194 members. Today there are 3,551 chapters, 11,000 branches, 50,000 auxiliaries, 22,000,000 adult members, and a Junior Membership comprising a large proportion of the school children of the land.

American citizenship and Red Cross membership are coming to be coincident terms.

Red Cross ideals

The strength of the Red Cross is in its ideals. The War Council expresses these ideals in three great aims:

1 To be ready to care for our soldiers and sailors on duty wherever and whenever that care may be needed.

2 To shorten the War—by strengthening the morale of the allied peoples and their armies, by alleviating their sufferings in the period which must elapse until the American army can become fully effective abroad.

3 To lay foundations for an enduring peace—by extending a message of practical relief and sympathy to the civilian population among our Allies, carrying to them an expression of the finest side of the American character.

The American people are translating these ideals into facts—into money and personal service. Last June the War Council asked for $100,000,000, and the people pledged $110,000,000, of which $108,000,000 has thus far been collected—collected at probably the lowest cost of collection in the history of such undertakings.

The Red Cross active workers are estimated at millions, and they are doing almost everything known to commerce and science, from bookkeeping to surgery, from knitting socks to feeding American prisoners in Germany.

The generosity of the American people keeps pace with the fast-growing scope of Red Cross activities. The growth of Red Cross has been so amazing, the multiplication of its activities so rapid, that few can be expected to know all that Red Cross means to the world in this hour of the world's need. Many who are active in one Red Cross endeavor are unfamiliar with scores of other Red Cross pursuits.

How Red Cross is organized

The great secret of Red Cross effectiveness is organization. Millions of people are working together through the medium of an organized machinery which co-ordinates the work of each with the work of all, and transmits the vast quantity of finished products to the people who need them. Thus benevolent emotion is turned into practical aid.

The organization co-relates and directs the work of the chapters, co-operates with the Army and Navy in relief measures, supports relief work abroad, recruits the personnel for overseas service and forwards to its agents in foreign lands the relief supplies produced by the chapter workers or purchased in the market.

Red Cross administration in the United States is decentralized. Red Cross is too vast to be completely administered from one spot. It would disintegrate under its own weight.

So the country is partitioned into thirteen Divisions, and there is a fourteenth Division for the territorial, insular and foreign chapters, with National Headquarters as the co-ordinating force. In each Division there is a manager and his staff, to whom the chapter officials are responsible, and the chapter workers deal directly with the Chapter Officers. The organization is military in its well ordered effort, but quite non-military in its democratic equalities, for the chapter worker is quite as important as the National Headquarters official. The Red Cross is organised for efficiency, not for display of authority.

Volunteer service

All of the Division Managers, and many of those on their staffs, are volunteers. Unpaid service is the general rule in chapters, divisions, and at National Headquarters. Most of the department heads in Washington are volunteers.

Service at National Headquarters

Washington Headquarters is a type and sample of the sort of service that Red Cross commands all over the country, high talent without remuneration. The staff is drawn from all parts of the country, made up of men and women experienced in large affairs, with various talents, each fitted into the department where his or her particular talent serves best.

The treasurer of the Red Cross is the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States.

The comptroller of the Red Cross is the comptroller of a great national corporation.

Civilian relief work is directed by one of America's ablest experts in social service work. Men of wide experience in purchasing, warehousing, and shipping conduct these several activities of Red Cross.

Noted physicians and surgeons constitute the Advisory Medical Board, and some of the most distinguished nurses of the country, the corresponding Committee on Nursing Service.

Red Cross technical activities are in the hands of technical experts.

Every dollar of the war fund goes to war relief

Red Cross affairs are economically administered. Every penny has been spent under an appropriation by the War Council after careful study. Membership dues pay the entire cost of operation, with a large balance for the handling of disaster relief and other work.

The work of women

In all the volunteer service of Red Cross none is more notable for devotion, none so notable for extent as that which the loyal women of America are giving in their chapter work. It is estimated that there are two million of these women, many giving most of their time to this work, all giving unstintingly. It is they who do the handiwork of Red Cross; its surgical dressings, hospital garments, knitted garments. To meet the demand for these articles, appropriations of $11,000,000 for raw materials have been necessary so far. During the month of April, 1918, the women of the country produced approximately 25,000,000 surgical dressings,

400,000 hospital garments,
500,000 knitted garments,
400,000 pieces of clothing for refugees, and many other important and useful articles.

The chapters are performing other great tasks. They are helping dependent families of soldiers and sailors. It is estimated that 100,000 such families are receiving help from the Red Cross at the present day.

Co-operation with the Army and Navy

The Red Cross is in close co-operation with the military authorities of the country.

Officers of the Army, the Navy and the United States Public Health Service are assigned to National Headquarters of the Red Cross to ensure a thorough understanding at all times of the ways in which Red Cross service can be most helpful.

By order of the Secretary of War, a Red Cross representative and an appropriate number of assistants are accredited to each camp and cantonment, to each division of the army in the field, and to all army base hospitals. These Red Cross men, and others attached to naval training stations and hospitals and working in co-operation with the military authorities, provide emergency hospital and other supplies where needful, keep the men in the hospital in touch with their families, and in many other ways add to the comfort and morale of our men.

Red Cross commissions abroad

Red Cross Commissions operate in France, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Serbia, Russia, Roumania, Palestine and Great Britain. The Commissions and their staffs are in the theatres of war, co-operating with the Army and Navy forces and with the military and civil authorities of the Allied Countries; co-operating also with other relief agencies, avoiding duplication of effort and confusion of purpose, assisting other agencies and assisted by them.

As in Headquarters at home, so on the Commissions, are men and women of great ability, using their talents and their experience where they are most needed.

These Commissions estimate the budgets for foreign relief, and the appropriations are made by the War Council after carefully scrutinising and sometimes amending the budgets.

What the Red Cross does

The story of Red Cross accomplishment and its plans for the future will be told in more detail in other statements. Here are some of its principal activities, which suggest the importance and scope of its work:

Organization of base-hospitals and ambulance companies, recruiting and training of nursing personnel for service in the army and navy medical corps, production of surgical dressings, hospital garments, refugee clothing, knitted goods, emergency supply service for our Army and Navy at home and abroad, sanitary service around cantonments, care of dependent families of soldiers and sailors,
study of the problem of crippled soldiers and sailors,
canteen service for troops en route,
feeding of American prisoners in enemy countries,
casualty information, service to convalescents,
disaster relief,
and relief for our Allies, including canteen work, tubercular work, hospital supply service, ambulance and hospital service, dispensaries, recreation centers, reconstruction of homes and villages, maternity work, repatriation of refugees, rehabilitation of mutilated men and many other forms of service.

The Red Cross supplements the work of the Army and Navy. The Red Cross War Council is endeavoring in every way to increase the effectiveness of the whole program of relief by the utmost co-operation with the Commission on Training Camp Activities, the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Y. W. C. A., Y. M. H. A., and other great patriotic agencies.

Red Cross Chapters have statements showing in detail how the War Fund is being expended. Ask your Chapter for these statements.

This is the first of a series of five announcements covering the work of the Red Cross.

Succeeding statements will deal with activities of the Red Cross in detail.

BURLESON DENIES COLONEL'S CHARGE

Has Not Discriminated Between Newspapers Nor Aided Hearst Service, He Asserts.

RETORTS ON ACCUSER

Insists Public Complain More of Him Than of Hearst—Quotes Tennyson on "Half-Lies."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Postmaster General Burleson tonight, taking up the challenge thrown down by Colonel Roosevelt last week, again entered the controversy which has been waging over the alleged discrimination by the Post Office Department against publications which uphold the war, but which have told the truth about the Administration's failure to conduct the war efficiently, to quote the allegation of Colonel Roosevelt.

The Postmaster General's statement follows:

"I have waited patiently for Mr. Roosevelt to substantiate his statement made in the morning papers of May 8, to the effect that the Postoffice Department was using the Espionage act for political purposes by 'punishing papers which uphold the war, but which told the truth about the Administration's failure to conduct the war efficiently,' and by failing to 'proceed against powerful newspapers which opposed the war or attacked our Allies, or directly or indirectly aided Germany against this country, as those papers upheld the Administration and defended inefficiency.'

"Mr. Roosevelt's reply of May 11, which he then termed 'preliminary,' in the main evades the issue presented, and is thoroughly misleading. He names The New York Tribune, Collier's and the Metropolitan Magazine in a way which has created the impression that these publications have been the objects of improper discrimination by the Postoffice Department.

"This Department has taken no action against Collier's.

"This department has taken no action against The Tribune.

"In exposing German propaganda early in the war, the department brought to public attention typical seditious matter which was being circulated throughout the country. It made available to newspaper men its files disclosing such disloyal matter. The Tribune promptly availed itself of this opportunity and gave helpful assistance, for which patriotic service I personally thanked one of its staff correspondents.

Hard's Article in The Metropolitan.

"The department has taken no action against The Metropolitan Magazine. With respect to this magazine, the incident referred to by Mr. Roosevelt occurred after the magazine had passed through the mails, and not a copy offered for mailing failed of transmission. The facts with respect to this matter were made public in a statement by the Solicitor, which appeared in the morning papers of March 30.

"Mr. Roosevelt's contention that The Metropolitan Magazine was injured from that incident is unfortunate. It cannot be said that the magazine lost sales on that account at that time. On the contrary, more copies of the March issue were sold, on account of the publicity given the matter. The injury, therefore, must have followed as a result of public disapproval of the matter contained in that issue. I have yet to learn of a patriotic reader, unless it be Mr. Roosevelt, who approved the publication in that issue of the article, 'Is America Honest?' by William Hard. This department received a large number of letters from widely separated sections of the country characterizing the publication of the Hard article as bad from every viewpoint. Some claimed it was unpatriotic, others that it violated the Espionage act, and still others that it was treasonable.

"If Mr. Roosevelt means that I should repair the injury (?) to the magazine by joining him in commending the 'Hard' article as desirable literature for forwarding the war aims of the Government, I cannot accommodate him.

"I am reliably informed that Germany highly appreciates the Hard article—so highly, in fact, that her propagandists have translated it into German, Spanish, Portuguese, and the Scandinavian languages, and are now flooding Mexico, South America, and other countries with copies of it. Mr. Roosevelt could hardly add to the injurious effects of this article should he now have it reproduced in The Congressional Record in full, with its disgusting illustrations, accompanied by his express approval, thus giving it free and unlimited distribution.

"So much for Mr. Roosevelt's first charge. Now what of his second?

Roosevelt and Hearst.

"The press of every complexion should always have the widest latitude for criticism of the acts of all public officials. This principle is constantly kept in mind in the administration of the Espionage act and disposing of complaints made thereunder.

"The Postoffice Department has received possibly more complaints from the public alleging that Mr. Roosevelt's articles were in violation of the Espionage act than it has against the Hearst newspapers. No matter published by either Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Hearst has come to my attention which, in my opinion, warranted action by the Postoffice department under the Espionage act against either of them.

"All but two of the articles in the Hearst papers referred to by Mr. Roosevelt were published before the passage of the Espionage act (June 15, 1917,) and some of them before our entry into the war. The Postoffice Department can hardly be expected, even by Mr. Roosevelt, to take action against a paper for the publication of matter which was printed and circulated before the passage of the law. The two articles specifically mentioned appeared in The New York American of July 27 and Nov. 22, 1917. Mr. Roosevelt is not a lawyer, and, however one may disagree with these two articles, it is confidently asserted that, if Mr. Roosevelt had advised with a lawyer of even second rate ability, he would have been told nothing could be found in these articles in violation of the Espionage act.

"Mr. Hearst, through his vast newspaper circulation and writings along lines familiar to the public, and Mr. Roosevelt, with the prestige of an ex-President of the United States, writing along entirely different but equally well-known lines, have each said things, whatever the motive, that a casual reader might believe were in conflict with the Espionage act. But those whose responsibility it is to enforce this law do not believe a case would be made to stand against either of them in the courts.

"The law must be administered as it is found. Any layman can read the facts, as stated in the opinion of the court in the department's case against Watson's paper, The Jeffersonian, (Congressional Record of Aug. 22, 1917,) and see that it was very different from Mr. Roosevelt's case against Mr. Hearst.

"If Mr. Roosevelt means to intimate that I was instrumental, directly or indirectly, in obtaining for Mr. Hearst or any company or association with which he is connected a restoration of news or cable facilities which had been withdrawn from him by the allied Governments, he is in error. I will say further I know of no one who performed such a service for him.

The Brisbane Telegram.

"As to the telegram to Arthur Brisbane—I quote from Mr. Roosevelt: 'Mr. Burleson says of Mr. Hearst's alter ego that he "congratulates the people of Chicago because they are to have the benefit of Mr. Brisbane's able and unselfish efforts in furtherance of the progress of the city and the development of the new paper, and I indulge the hope that it will always stand for justice, freedom and the principles of true democratic government.'

"However this telegram may have been handled or whatever its effect, the purpose in sending it was far from that charged by Mr. Roosevelt.

"In conclusion, to those who have the will to launch assaults against public officials who are conscientiously discharging their duty, I commend a careful reading of the eighth stanza in Tennyson's "The Grandmother."

The eighth stanza of Tennyson's "The Grandmother," to which Mr. Burleson refers, reads thus:

And the parson made it his text that week,
And he said likewise,
That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies.
That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight.

ASSAILS HOHENZOLLERNISM

Prof. Van Tyne Says German State Recognizes No Moral Obligation.

Professor C. H. Van Tyne of the University of Michigan spoke last night in St. Andrew's M. E. Church, Seventy-sixth Street, near Columbus Avenue. Dr. Armand de Lille, who was sent to this country to tell of the work of French physicians and surgeons in connection with the French civil population, was also to speak, but was unable to be present.

Professor Van Tyne, who studied for three years in Germany, said that even the textbooks of the schools were, and are, filled with military spirit.

"Even the arithmetics," he said, "give examples in terms of soldiers and marching, and so the Germans grow up filled with the military spirit and submission to the Hohenzollerns. The much-lauded contentment of the Germans before the war, which so greatly impressed American tourists, was nothing more than depression caused by submission to the family which reigns by divine right.

"In 1900 the German Emperor said, 'Nothing must be done in this world without the intervention of Germany.' That the State has no moral obligation has been the belief and the philosophy of Germany from the time of Frederick the Great to the present time. Germany is not so much condemned because it is at war but because of the way of it. Worse than invasion is the destruction of the moral structure. Perhaps no better illustration of the differences between autocracy and democracy can be given than that when Germany wished to be pleasant to and compliment this country some years ago, she sent us a bronze statue of the Hohenzollern autocrat, Frederick the Great; but when France wished to show her strength of feeling for America, she sent us a splendid statue of Liberty."

GEN. SIBERT TRANSFERRED.

Detailed as Director of Gas Service of the Army.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Major General William L. Sibert, who commanded the first division of American troops sent to France with General Pershing, has been relieved of command of the Southeastern Department of the army, and detailed as Director of the Gas Service of the United States Army. His headquarters will be in Washington.

General Sibert is an engineer officer, and built the Gatun locks of the Panama Canal, in recognition of which service Congress promoted him to the rank of Brigadier General. While in France with General Pershing he had every opportunity to study the uses to which gases have been put by the allied armies and the Germans, and he is regarded as peculiarly fitted for the new post.

On his return from France recently General Sibert was assigned to command the Southeastern Department, where most of the training camps are situated. His successor there has not been announced.

TROOPS GOING ABROAD FAST

Assistant Secretary Roosevelt Says the Program Is Exceeded.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 19.—"The people who give the most are not we who go down in our pockets and fill the 'war chests.' It is the mothers of the men of the army and navy who are going to win the war on the soil of Europe, who are giving the greatest contribution to the war," declared Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in this city today.

Secretary Roosevelt was the speaker at a large meeting in the municipal auditorium and an overflow meeting that marked the opening of a community campaign for the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and the Young Men's Hebrew Association war funds. He said Navy Department officials believed the navy had the U-boat situation well in hand.

"It is a mighty significant fact," Mr. Roosevelt said, "that today we are getting to the other side more men, better convoyed, than we had hoped for in the program that was laid down last Fall."

Last Service in St. Bartholomew's.

Yesterday's service was the last that will ever be held in the present St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church, at Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. Until the new church is completed the services will be held in the chapel. St. Bartholomew's Church was established in 1835 in a small building in Lafayette Place. In 1878 the congregation outgrew the church and moved into the present quarters, on which the workmen begin demolition today.

BIG PLANE TO FOLLOW RESNATI'S BODY HERE

Caproni Machine Will Bring Captain D'Annunzio and Sergeant Gino.

ESCORT OF 150 CADETS

Flowers Will Be Scattered from the Airplane Along the Way—Service in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

When the body of Captain Antonio Silvio Resnati of the Royal Italian Flying Corps, who was killed on Friday while testing a new biplane at the aviation field at Mineola, is brought from that place to New York tomorrow, it will be followed by the giant Caproni airplane in which the Captain made his record flights between Langley Field, Va., and New York. The machine will bring Captain Hugo d'Annunzio and Sergeant Pilot Gianfelice Gino. A picked escort of 150 cadets will accompany the body to this city. It will arrive at the Pennsylvania Station at 2 o'clock and will be carried to St. Patrick's Cathedral, where services will be held. The cortège will pass up Fifth Avenue, and while it is moving Captain d'Annunzio in the Caproni will fly low and scatter flowers along the way.

The American military authorities have charge of the funeral, which will be attended by a guard of honor composed of French, British, Italian, and American army officers. Alan R. Hawley, President of the Aero Club of America; Henry Woodhouse, and August Post will represent that organization. The body of Captain Resnati will be placed in a vault in Calvary Cemetery and will rest there until the end of the war, when it will be shipped to Italy for burial in Milan, his native place.

Friends of Captain Resnati, who have been sending flowers in care of the various officers of the Italian Military Mission and the Aero Club, are asked to send their tributes to the Pennsylvania Station, where a room has been reserved.

CAR ROWDIES FINED.

Magistrate Imposes $25 Sentence on Ten Bronx Youths.

Ten young men, ranging in age from 18 to 24 years, were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct in a trolley car bound from Clason Point to the Bronx terminal of the line last night, after they had terrorized the women and children aboard and used profane language. They were later found guilty by Magistrate Barlow in the Men's Night Court and fined $25 each, with the alternative of serving five days in the Workhouse.

The complainants were Detectives Blake, Carlin, and Sanders, who had been detailed by Inspector O'Connor of the Seventh Inspection District to keep an eye on defenders of this character. Each of the officers testified that when they boarded the car they found the ten rowdies attempting to seat themselves in the laps of the women passengers and threatening to assault any of the male passengers who might show an inclination to interfere. In passing sentence Magistrate Barlow said it afforded him great pleasure to impose the maximum sentence.

JOWETT QUOTES PRESIDENT

Reads in Westminster Chapel a Letter on American Altruism.

LONDON, May 19.—The Rev. Dr. J. Henry Jowett, former pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, addressing his congregation, including Premier Lloyd George, in Westminster Chapel today, said he recently had received a letter from President Wilson. It was almost entirely private, but there was a passage regarding which he was glad of the opportunity to give publicity. President Wilson wrote:

"While deeply sorry that you are leaving America, I am glad you are taking away an intimate knowledge of our people which will enable you to interpret them on the other side of the water.

"One of the most difficult things I have attempted is to convince foreign ministers and foreign peoples that the purposes and ideals of the people of the United States are, indeed, unselfish and altruistic.

"I am sure you are as convinced of that fact as I am, and my great pleasure in expressing such purposes has been derived from the confidence that I was really speaking for my people."

CONDEMN DAVID S. JORDAN.

Cornell Class Demands Cancellation of Graduation Certificate.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 19.—Twenty-five members of the class of 1873 at Cornell University, one of the earliest classes graduated from that institution, meeting here tonight at the forty-fifth reunion, called upon the Cornell Board of Trustees to revoke the certificate of graduation granted to David Starr Jordan in 1872 and the degree of Doctor of Laws granted to him in 1886. The resolution follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the class of 1873 of Cornell University that the Board of Trustees should be and hereby is requested to rescind and revoke their action in allowing a certificate of graduation to David Starr Jordan and any degrees conferred upon him."

Mr. Jordan's pacifist opinions and his attitude on the war are the basis of this action.

Ask 500 Stenographers to Help.

The Mayor's Committee of National Defense announced yesterday the immediate need of 500 women stenographers for patriotic work two hours on certain nights each week, who are to be known as the Volunteer Typist Division. Miss Ruth Eisen, assistant secretary of the divison, has enrolled seventy-five girls during the week. The services of this division have been offered to the American Red Cross in the campaign for funds which begins today. Volunteers for the stenographic division may apply to the headquarters of the committee, Hall of Records, Chambers and Centre Streets.

FOR VOTE ON PROHIBITION.

But Lewis Is Against Federal Amendment—For State Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 19.—Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, said tonight:

"I favor the restoration of the State convention, the delegates to which should be chosen at a direct primary in order that the party's principles and policies may find authoritative expression. The party's candidates should be bound by the party's declaration of principles.

"I favor the submission to the people of the State of an amendment to the Constitution of the State providing for prohibition. The local elections in this State in April have shown that there is a marked difference of opinion among the voters of the State upon this subject. Believing, as I do, that the Federal Constitution is an instrument of union and should not be made an agency for discord, and that its provisions should be those only which are generally acceptable, I am opposed to the ratification of the pending national amendment.

"Americans have one present and compelling duty. We must win the war. Every man in responsible public position must subordinate every ambition to this one purpose. Tyrannical power, wherever it exists, must be destroyed. This State has done much, but much remains to be done. Our enemies confront us on the fields of France and Italy, and are among us in our daily life. Their sympathizers, propagandists, and parties must be sought out and dealt with as public enemies, without hesitation, faltering, or delay. I have endeavored to do my share in the past, and shall continue to do so. We must win the war or submit to slavery."

SURVIVES 1,500-FOOT FALL.

Lieut. Dawson Saved by Wings of Airplane Striking Buildings.

FULTON, Ky., May 19.—Lieutenant Joseph Dawson of Park Field, near Memphis, Tenn., was severely injured here today when he fell 1,500 feet in an army biplane, landing on two automobiles and a wagon in the street. The fall came after Lieutenant Dawson, who was here in the interest of the Red Cross campaign, had executed two loops and was coming out of the second, his machine going into tail spin. The aviator's life was saved by the wings of the machine striking two buildings and thus breaking his fall.

NEGRO AND WIFE LYNCHED.

Georgia Mob Hangs Two More for Complicity in Murder.

VALDOSTA, Ga., May 19.—Hayes Turner, negro, and his wife, Mary Turner, accused of connection with the murder of Hampton Smith, a Brooks County farmer, and the wounding of his wife at their home near Barney last Thursday night, have been hanged by a mob. Two other negroes, Will Head and Will Thompson, wer lynched Friday night.

Turner was lynched last night at Okapilco River, in Brooks County, after the mob had learned that the plot to attack the Smiths was made at his home. Mary Turner, who was said to have had Smith's watch in her possession when captured, was hanged at Folsom's Bridge on Little River today.

Citizens still are searching for Sidney Johnson, who, according to Mrs. Smith, fired the shot that killed her husband. Feeling continues high in Brooks County, and it is believed Johnson also will be lynched if captured.

Thompson and Head were caught Friday night. Head confessed his part in the crime, saying that he stole Smith's gun and gave it to Johnson. What part, if any, Thompson played in the murder, is not known here.

Turner and his wife, former tenants of the Smith farm, recently quarreled with Smith over an account, and this is believed to have led to the attack. The shot that killed Smith was fired through a window in his home. Mrs. Smith, wounded by another shot, rushed out into the yard, where she was beaten by the negroes, who fled after robbing the place. Mrs. Smith was found several hours later by neighbors.

TO DISCUSS WAR PROBLEMS.

Hylan and Whitman Among the Speakers at Mayors' Conference.

ALBANY, May 19.—All cities in the State are now confronted with so many pressing war problems that it has been decided to devote practically all of the ninth annual meeting of the New York State Conferences of Mayors and Other City Officials to consideration of these questions. The conference will be held in Newburg on June 11, 12, and 13. In a statement sent today to all the cities the Advisory Committee says: "We have had to dispense with most of the entertainment features."

The City of Newburg will entertain the municipal officials on Wednesday evening at a "Hoover Dinner." The speakers will be Mayor John F. Hylan of New York, who has been asked to discuss why the Empire State cities should have authority to own and operate public utilities, and Governor Charles S. Whitman, who will speak on "New York State in War Times."

TEN INJURED IN CAR CRASH.

Broadway Car Rams Hamburg Avenue Car at Williamsburg Bridge.

Nine passengers and a conductor were injured early yesterday morning when a Broadway car ran into a Hamburg Avenue car at the entrance to the tunnel at the Manhattan end of the Williamsburg Bridge. The trolley pole of the Hamburg Avenue car had become detached as the car was entering the tunnel, leaving the car in darkness, and the Broadway car rammed the rear of the darkened car.

Patrolman Thomas Fitzgerald of the Clinton Street Station, stationed on the bridge, was in the centre of the structure at the time the accident occurred. He hurried to the scene and commandeered a number of passing automobiles, and had the injured taken to the squad room of the Clinton Street Station, a few blocks away.

The injured, who were all attended and sent home, were:

RAILROADS GET NEAR BILLION FOR UPKEEP

of instructions issued by Director General McAdoo, which contained the following:

In determining what additions and betterments, including equipment, and what road extensions, should be treated as necessary, and what work already entered upon should be suspended, please be guided by the following general principles:

From the financial standpoint it is highly important to avoid the necessity for raising any new capital which is not absolutely necessary for the protection and development of the required transportation facilities to meet the present and prospective needs of the country's business under war conditions. From the standpoint of the available supply of labor and material, it is likewise highly important that this supply shall not be absorbed except for the necessary purpose mentioned in the preceding sentence.

Please also bear in mind that it may frequently happen that projects which might be regarded as highly meritorious and necessary when viewed from the separate standpoint of a particular company, may not be equally meritorious or necessary under existing conditions when the Government has possession and control of railroads generally and therefore when facilities heretofore subject to the exclusive control of the separate companies are now available for common use whenever such common use will promote the movement of traffic.

If these instructions were followed, the estimates should be conservative. Nevertheless they were carefully revised and further reduced, as shown by this statement.

The approval of these budgets is necessarily tentative. It was necessary to ascertain as speedily as possible what improvements were required and the probable cost and grant authority to proceed with those most urgent so that the work could be done promptly and before next Winter. The subject is still under careful study, with a view to postponing or canceling any work which can reasonably be deferred; and the financial condition of the carriers and their ability to repay the money borrowed will require curtailment in many cases. On the other hand, it is certain that there will be considerable additions from time to time to the amounts required for particular improvements which were not foreseen when the budgets were prepared. But on the whole, the figures given in the statement are as definite and accurate as it is possible for any estimates for such vast and varied work to be.

ROADS' NEEDS MET, BANKERS BELIEVE

Expenditures for Cars and Locomotives Expected to Prevent Recurrence of Congestion.

Railroad men and bankers who were largely interested in financing the carriers before the Government assumed responsibility for railroad management, said last night that the size of the appropriation announced by Director General McAdoo appeared adequate for the immediate needs of the roads. Information supplied to them that the aggregate sum asked by the railroads had been reduced about 27 per cent. did not alter their opinion. It was said that, in forming their budgets, the managers of many railroad companies had sought more money for equipment and extensions than they had expected to get under a rigid paring down process at Washington, and for this reason the elimination of nearly $350,000,000 from an application for $1,287,000,000 was by no means unsettling.

Railroad operating men expressed as much satisfaction over the fact that the appropriation had been established definitely in dollars and cents as over the billion-dollar allotment. The management of individual lines would no longer have to speculate over the amount of money available for them, it was pointed out, and now could go ahead in carrying out plans for increasing facilities urgently needed to move traffic necessary to the conduct of the war.

The immediate use of funds, it may be said, will be for the addition of thousands of new freight and coal cars and locomotives to existing equipment, and rush work in laying new tracks and stiffening road beds to the end that there may be no repetition of last Winter's congestion on the lines to seaboard. Estimating $45,000 as the price of a locomotive of the proposed new standard type and $3,000 for a freight car, the appropriation of practically $40,000,000 for equipment will cover the 30,000 cars recently ordered and 2,000 locomotives. The Director General recently closed contracts with locomotive builders for 1,025 locomotives.

"Work on these orders is under way," said an officer of one of the leading locomotive companies last night, "and deliveries will begin before the end of July. There is no reason to doubt that the orders already placed will be completed by the early Autumn."

According to the reports from Washington, it was said that the sums fixed upon could be regarded as tentative and might be revised upward. This possibility the railroad men found encouraging in respect to the equipment situation, especially as the car building program as viewed by the railroad managers will need to be expanded before long. It is expected that fully 100,000 cars and locomotives up to 3,000 will be ordered before the Railroad Administration completes its plans for the adequate handling of war-brought traffic.

Steel Needed for Equipment.

The railroad men and equipment builders, in discussing the outlook, said that the allotment of funds by no means went all the way toward solving the problems which are entailed in the situation of the carriers. The manufacturing capacity for cars, locomotives, rails, &c., is available, they asserted, but the matter of steel and labor has yet to be taken into account. With the pressure on the steel mills growing daily from shipyards and munition plants at home and abroad, it still remains something of a question whether the Government will be able to spare all the material needed by the equipment companies for rush work on the new orders. The War Industries Board has taken up the problem with the steel makers, and it is understood that railroad needs played a part in the conference last Friday between the board and leading steel men in Washington.

Bankers who were reached last night were unwilling to discuss the financial aspects of the railroad budgets, pleading that they were not familiar with details of the Government's plans. The Washington interpretation of the program, as given in last night's dispatches, was that the carriers would be expected to finance themselves as far as possible through the sale of securities, which, if necessary, would be purchased by the Government.

Details of the Allotments.

A study of the Government's budget for particular railroads discloses some interesting facts. The New York Central applied for $70,712,087 for additions and new equipment and received all but $41,000 of the full amount. The Pennsylvania system, comprising both the lines east and west of Pittsburgh, sought nearly $150,000,000 and received $112,654,650, which was about 24 per cent. less than asked for. The Reading sought about $34,500,000 and received 27 per cent. less than this amount. The Baltimore & Ohio's application was cut down slightly more than 5 per cent., the Atchison's approximately 19 per cent., the New Haven's about 16 per cent.

The Great Northern, one of the great Granger lumber and mining railroads, in respect to traffic, stood out from the group of major carriers because of its modest application for $14,582,988, all of which was granted by the Railroad Administration. A survey of the statement as a whole showed that the roads of the East, where the wear and tear of export traffic during the last four years has affected roadbed and equipment, reported a relatively greater need for funds than most of the carriers of the West.

Bankers who have recently held conferences with Controller of the Currency John Skelton Williams, who is looking after the financial matters in connection with the Government's administration of the railroads, said yesterday that Mr. Williams's idea was that the railroad companies should finance themselves to the extent of their ability and that the Government should supply them with funds only in cases where accommodations could not be obtained through the regular channels.

The understanding here is that the roads will not put out long-term bond issues, but endeavor to finance themselves by short-term notes. It is the expectation and desire of Secretary McAdoo and Mr. Williams that the banks should aid the roads as much as possible as far as current needs are concerned. As an illustration of the plan of financing adopted, it will be recalled that last week the New York Central Railroad, which had to meet a maturity of one-year notes of the Michigan Central, obtained a loan of $6,000,000 at 6 per cent. from the Central Trust Company. It was also reported that recently the Pennsylvania Railroad negotiated a loan of $2,000,000 at 6 per cent. from the Guaranty Trust Company.

At the beginning of the year it was estimated that the railroad maturities of 1918 would aggregate about $250,000,000. Since the first of January there have been paid off $45,000,000 of New Haven notes, $10,000,000 of New York Central notes, and several smaller issues. It is now estimated that the maturities for the rest of the year will be from $150,000,000 to $175,000,000.

$1,100,000,000 A YEAR NEEDED, SAID J. J. HILL

In 1907 He Declared That Sum Should Be Spent Annually for Five Years.

The announcement that the Railroad Administration has approved of the expenditure of nearly $1,000,000,000 for additions, betterments, equipment and extensions of the rail carriers of the country, recalls the statement made about eleven years ago by the late James J. Hill, the nation's foremost railroad authority, that at least $1,100,000,000 should be spent annually for new construction and improvements. It was in January, 1907, that Mr. Hill, in discussing the inadequacy of new railway development to keep pace with business expansion declared that the expenditure of at least $5,500,000,000 was required for the five years from 1907 to 1912.

Statistics indicate that during the ten years from 1906 to 1916 the expenditures of the railroads for improvements aggregated $5,100,000,000, most of which was made in the earlier part of the decade. It is the opinion of railroad men today that Mr. Hill's estimate was none too large and that the rail carriers and the country at large would be much better off today if the requirements, as indicated by him, had been fulfilled.

The construction of new roads has been relatively small since the outbreak of the war. In 1914 it amounted to only 1,532 miles, and in 1915 the mileage was 933, the smallest amount built in any year since the civil war. In 1916 there was constructed 1,098 miles and in 1917 979 miles.

Francis H. Sisson, Vice President of the Guaranty Trust Company and until recently associated with the Railway Executives' Advisory Committee, in explaining the lack of improvements in recent years, said:

"The railroads had not kept pace with the growth of the country and could not bear the added burdens of the war. Lack of credit born of Governmental regulation had wrought this finish. The decline of railroad credit following the enactment of the Hepburn act and the amendment giving the Interstate Commerce Commission power to suspend rates was continued with deadly certainty. Rates moved ever downward, expenses piled ever upward, uneconomic laws and multiplied regulations consumed revenues. Banks and investors looked elsewhere, and the unremitting conflict of the public wrought its own undoing. Now the Government has stepped in to assume the burden of its own creation. What the result will be remains to be seen."

BENEFITS AT THEATRES AID WAR CHARITIES

John McCormack Sings for Soldiers and Sailors at Vaudeville Performance at Playhouse.

An unusual number of special Sunday performances, most of which were given for the various war charities, took place in the theatres last night. At the Playhouse, where the weekly free vaudeville program for soldiers and sailors was given, the unannounced appearance of John McCormack as one of the entertainers aroused a crowded house to an unusual pitch of enthusiasm. Mr. McCormack, who was introduced by Grace George, sang four songs. Cabaret entertainers from Shanley's filled out most of the program.

These vaudeville performances, Miss George said, will now be suspended temporarily, and in their stead regular performances of the New York plays will be given, one a week, in the theatres in which they are playing. Three plays have already been given in the last five or six weeks, and in most cases they have proved more popular with the men than have the vaudeville shows. A performance of "A Tailor-Made Man" will be given at the Cohan & Harris Theatre next Sunday night, and "Seventeen" will be played at the Booth on the Sunday following.

The players of two of Oliver Morosco's productions, augmented by Grace La Rue and one or two other entertainers, presented a diversified program at the Morosco Theatre in aid of the Stage Women's War Relief, and were successful in raising about $3,500. The events of the evening, which were designed more for the theatrically sophisticated than for the casual playgoer, were grouped under the general title of "Gosh! We're All Friends," and included travesties and bits of vaudeville. The major portion of the entertainment was written by Mr. Morosco, who also made his first appearance as an actor in the course of the evening.

At the Hippodrome a concert was given under the auspices of the Brownsville Labor Lyceum, netting about $7,300, in addition to $800 for the Red Cross. Among those who appeared were Mischa Elman, who made his final appearance of the season; Nina Morgana, coloratura soprano, and Morgan Kingston, tenor.

The newly formed American Committee for Devastated France, the members of which are now working in France under the leadership of Miss Anne Morgan, gave their first benefit performance at the Shubert Theatre to a good-sized audience. Among those on the program were Yvette Guilbert, Percy Grainger, and Clifton Crawford. An address was made by Martin W. Littleton.

A fair-sized house attended a program given at Carnegie Hall under the auspices of the Central Executive Committee of the Russian Federation and the Russian Unity League, the proceeds going to the Russian Relief Fund. The soloists were Eva Didur, Adamo Didur, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and Sascha Jacobsen.

GIVE PLAY FOR ANNA HELD.

Actress Sees Performance of "A Maid of Honor" at Hotel Savoy.

In honor of Anna Held, and to enliven the tedium of her recovery from a severe illness, there was a special performance of the playlet, "A Maid of Honor," at the Hotel Savoy yesterday morning. A squad of stage hands and scenic mechanics arrived with a vanload of the needed properties and took possession of the grand ballroom, where a stage was built for the performance.

Josephine Victor enacted "Joan of Arc," supported by Clifford Brooke, Guy Saziersea, and Walter Reynolds. Anna Held was rolled to the temporary theatre from her suite in a reclining chair. Except her physician, Dr. Donald McCaskey, and two nurses, there were no other auditors. Miss Held was greatly affected by the performance and its many suggestions of her native land. After the play she sent a large bouquet of roses to Miss Victor.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Joseph Klaw, son of Marc Klaw, will make his debut in the producing field with the presentation of "Oh, What a Night!" a musical comedy written by Harry Delf, an actor now appearing in "The Rainbow Girl."

A one-act play, "The Thriller," will be offered as a curtain-raiser to Elizabeth Tyree Metcalfe's play, "Starting Something," when that piece is presented at the Vieux Colombier Wednesday night. Four performances of the two plays will be given in aid of the Red Cross.

Eva Fallon will succeed Emilie Lea this evening in "Fancy Free," which moves tonight to the Casino. The performance a week from tomorrow night will be for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Wills Holt Wakefield will begin a tour of the cantonments next week at Camp Merritt, New Jersey.

Sally Cohen-Rice, who has been in retirement since the death of her husband, John R. Rice, two years ago, is about to return to vaudeville in a one-act comedy.

A professional matinee of the Pelham naval show, "Biff! Bang!" will be given at the Century on Monday, June 3. "Biff! Bang!" will begin its engagement at the Century with a matinee on Memorial Day.

GOOD PICTURES SEEN IN 'RESURRECTION'

Version of Tolstoy's Novel Given at the Strand — Pauline Frederick as Katusha.

DETAILS RECEIVE ATTENTION

"Old Wives for New" Furnishes Material for Photoplay at Rivoli—"De Luxe Annie" at Rialto.

There are some remarkably good pictures in the screen version of Tolstoy's "Resurrection" presented at the Strand Theatre this week, and the photoplay offers a good story. Also Pauline Frederick as Katusha acts with skill and her support cannot be complained of. The production seems to have been made with some regard for the time and place of the scenes, and commendable attention was paid to details in the staging of the action. But the play at the Strand is not Tolstoy's "Resurrection." It is simply a moving picture play in which Tolstoy's story is used. His analysis of human beings, his presentation of altering and developing character, his purposeful exposure of social and political conditions does not reach the screen.

The story of how Katusha, beginning as a simple country girl in the home of two unmarried sisters, became the dupe of Prince Nekludov, and of how, driven out by the sisters, the girl went to spiritual death and was reclaimed later through the instrumentality of the repentent Prince and Simonson, the prophet, is familiar to many. The various episodes in Katusha's life are dramatically set forth, and the scenes of the girl before the court, in prison, and on the way to Siberia are well done, but one unfamiliar with Tolstoy's work would probably wonder at the sudden transformation in Katusha's character without the operation of sufficient discernible influence.

The fourth installment of the Outing-Chester pictures is on the Strand program this week and, for many, it will prove one of the most interesting of the offerings. It is entitled "A Coorial on the Orinoco," and it may be said that a coorial is a boat. Native Venezuelan life and scenery make good photographic subjects.

Those for whom facial fluidity are elements of comedy will enjoy Smiling Billy Parsons in "Matching Billy."

David Graham Phillips's "Old Wives for New" furnished Cecil B. DeMille material for the photoplay at the Rivoli this week, and, apparently, Mr. De Mille made the most of his material. As a work of careful and realistic staging, "Old Wives for New" is an accomplishment, and many will enjoy it because of this, but the question is, was the material worth all of the effort put upon it by director and actors? The story is about a man who had preserved his youth and taste for refinement while his wife had permitted herself to become a frowzy old frump whom even the best of husbands could not love and admire. The husband meets a charming young woman and wants to separate from his wife by amicable divorce so that he can marry the other woman. But the wife maintains her rights and the other woman insists on a divorce, so the problem cannot be solved nicely and develops all sorts of complications and difficulties before the man is finally free to marry the woman of his second choice. There is undoubtedly material for a real study of life in "Old Wives for New," but, because of Mr. Phillips or Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the scenario, the picture play as presented is not much more than a rather highly colored melodrama.

Corrine White and Eunice Henschell, two of the pupils of the Luigi Albertieri Ballet School, dance Paderewski's "Minuet a L'Antique" very prettily at the Rivoli in another of John Wenger's pleasing settings.

The feature at the Rialto this week is Edward Clark's play, "De Luxe Annie," made into a movie with some switching of the sequence of the original story and the omission of the rather unconvincing prologue and epilogue presented on the stage. "De Luxe Annie," as many must know, is about a girl who, suffering from amnesia, becomes an accomplished crook and is brought to recognize her husband, home and friends only after an operation on her head. The piece is faithful to the principles of melodrama rather than to medical science and will no doubt be enjoyed by those who don't care about such things as possibility and coherence in plot. Norma Talmadge, as the heroine, plays her part well and, in general, the acting is good.

"Up in the Air," in which the Katzenjammer Kids and their well-known comic supplement associates appear in animated drawings, is about as stupid and devoid of art in idea and execution as most of the other Katzenjammer products.

"A Soul for Sale," with Dorothy Phillips in the leading rôle, was presented at the Broadway Theatre for the first time yesterday.

The topical reviews at the several moving picture houses this week are interesting. They show the incidents of the inauguration of the Air Mail Service between New York and Washington, pictures of the ships—the Vindictive and the Iris—and some of the men who participated in the Zeebrugge raid, and activity connected with the recent fighting in Picardy.

The Committee on Public Information, whose first feature film, "Pershing's Crusaders," opens at the Lyric tomorrow night, has announced that no war tax will be added to admissions. The boxes at the initial showing here will be occupied by the members of the Liberty Film Committee, which has charge of the exhibition, and others known in social and military circles.

CANTOR'S FIRST CONCERT.

Josef Rosenblatt Pleases Great Audience at Carnegie Hall.

Joseph Rosenblatt, cantor of the Hungarian congregation Ohab Zedek, and the possessor of a phenomenal tenor voice, faced a great audience in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon at the first of a series of concerts that he is to give over the country at large. He recently refused an offer to sing with the Chicago Opera Company, but he has been heard in New York as a singer of Jewish folksongs and traditional airs of the Jewish faith. These were among his best in yesterday's program, ending with the famous "Eili, Eili," which drew an ovation from the crowded hall and stage.

Cantor Rosenblatt, who still looks a young man under his black cap and dark beard, pleased the audience with an old ballad, "Auf dem Pripichuk," and two arrangements of his own. He sang in English the Russian Gretchaninow's "Lullaby," dropping his voice to a pianissimo of rare carrying power. In his less familiar operatic airs there was more than a suggestion of Caruso in the "Questa o Quella," from Verdi's "Rigoletto," and the "Donna e Mobile," from that work, which he gave as a final encore. Accompanied by André Benoist, he also sang, in French the "Elegy" of Massenet, and in Russian an air from "La Juive."

DISAPPOINTED BY FREMSTAD

Singer Pleads Illness at Red Cross Benefit in Brooklyn.

Saying she was too ill to sing, Mme. Olive Fremstad disappointed an audience, gathered last night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. She was scheduled to sing a number of selections in connection with a concert by the Garde Republicaine Band, which arrived here several days ago.

The singer appeared at the music hall apparently in good health, and said she was indisposed a short time before she was to sing her first number. Some persons in the audience thought Mme. Fremstad's indisposition might have been aggravated by the small audience, the house being about half filled.

The concert was a benefit for the Brooklyn Chapter of the American Red Cross, and the announcement was made that all who desired might have their money refunded. Only a few visited the box office to receive their admission fees.

Are You Run-Down?

WHEN your system is undermined by worry or overwork—when your vitality is lowered—when you feel "any how"—when your nerves are "on edge"—when the least exertion tires you—you are in a run-down condition.

Your system is like a plant that is drooping for want of water. And just as water revives a drooping plant—so Wincarnis gives new strength and new vitality to a "run-down" constitution.

Because Wincarnis possesses a fourfold power. It is a Tonic, a Restorative, a Blood-maker and a Nerve-builder—all in one. Therefore, Wincarnis promotes new strength, new blood, new nerve force and new vitality.

The benefit begins from the first spoonful. You can feel it doing you good. You can feel your whole system being surcharged with new vitality. That is why so many Doctors have recommended Wincarnis.

The ingredients of Wincarnis have been recommended by the medical profession for years. Its formula is on every bottle. You will find it pleasant to take, and easy to digest.

Wincarnis has been famous in Europe for a third of a century. Thousands have testified that it has restored them to health and strength when they have been Weak, Anemic, Nervous or Run-down.

IF ONLY FOR OUR OWN SAKE.

President WILSON gives a definition of the German peace feelers which ought to put an end to all talk about considering them, so far as such talk is merely honest and stupid and not deliberately treacherous and intentionally German. He has "tested" these German proposals, he tells us, and has "found them insincere." "I now recognise them for what they are;" and what are they? Here is the definition:

> An opportunity to have a free hand, particularly in the East, to carry out the purposes of conquest and exploitation.

That is, they will, or say they will, make certain concessions in France and Belgium if Russia and Rumania are turned over to them to do as they like with. And the President answers, "I intend to stand by Russia as well as by France."

This is not mere altruism, either. We are fighting for mankind, of course, but specifically we are fighting for that part of mankind which is comprised within the borders of the United States. We are fighting to preserve its independence and its institutions. And we know that neither the independence nor the institutions will last long if the great predatory power of modern times is permitted to extend its sway from the Baltic Sea to the Pacific Ocean. That is what will follow, as the night the day, if we are so foolish as to abandon Russia to her mercy.

It makes no difference in this respect whether Russia is brave or cowardly, whether she has abandoned us or stood by us, whether she is ruled by saints or madmen. The present German Empire, comparatively circumscribed in extent and strength, has assailed and sought to overpower the rest of the world. If she is made virtually limitless in extent and strength, as she would be if European and Asiatic Russia were absorbed by her, she will be able in the future to accomplish with ease the overthrow of the rest of the world; and the first blow she will aim in that event will be at the American Continent. It is our own fault if we let her make herself irresistible. If we do, we will be her first victims. And if we let her have her way with Russia, irresistible she will be within ten years.

A SAFE PASSAGE.

Three large ships with cargoes of American wheat for Switzerland have arrived safely at a port on the west coast of France. They were escorted by warships of our navy. Other carriers, protected in the same way, are crossing the Atlantic. Our Government has promised to help the Swiss with supplies of grain. Some weeks ago the Germans sunk a Spanish ship with a load of wheat released here for Switzerland as she was approaching the French Mediterranean port of Cette. In reply to protests, the Berlin Government would give no safety guarantee effective in less than three months for other grain carriers that might follow. Secretary LANSING remarked in a note to the American Minister at Berne that so much time would be required "to modify existing orders to submarine commanders under which American ships carrying wheat for Swiss relief are to be torpedoed." In the same note he said:

> This means that Germany is still maintaining an armed blockade of Switzerland, and that American wheat on American ships heretofore tendered to Switzerland cannot go forward unless these ships are prepared to fight their way through the blockade.
> This challenge the Government of the United States is prepared to meet.

And so the three large freighters whose safe arrival on the other side is now reported left an American port at once, accompanied by warships that could "fight their way through."

Notice had already been given by the Government at Berlin that if a submarine, not having received a restraining order, "should sink one of these vessels, the responsibility will fall not upon the German Government, but upon the President of the United States." German newspapers characterized Secretary LANSING'S statements as "fables about a German blockade." But they have not spoken of the sinking of the Spanish ship Sardinero in the "safe passage" leading to Cette. She had on board 3,000 tons of foodstuffs for the Swiss, and her papers, showing clearly how she was employed, were thoroughly examined by the submarine commander before she was sent to the bottom.

For ships loaded with the grain granted to Switzerland there is safety only in the protection of escorting gunboats and destroyers. A so-called guarantee of immunity from Germany would not be effective after the proposed delay of three months. The Belgian Relief Commission's record of losses shows how much such guarantees are worth, even when officially signed and accompanied by directions concerning routes to be taken.

LIBERTY LOAN DETAILS.

One star differeth from another in glory, and each banking district has something to plume itself upon in its record on the Liberty Loan. Minneapolis heads the list with an oversubscription of 172 per cent., New York foots the list with 124 per cent. oversubscribed, and the imposing total of $1,114,930,700. That is one-quarter of the loan, and approximates tenfold the generous subscription of Milwaukee. Chicago contributes the second largest sum, $608,878,600. Each of the twelve districts makes an honorable record, and the lower districts often made a greater effort than those that stand higher on the roll.

In no district is there the least sign of slacking in the effort against the enemy of the world. On the contrary, the referendum against Kaiserism gains in significance as it is examined in detail. There is no parallel in the world for the popularity of this loan. Other loans have been taken mainly by high finance. Even in France and England, and conspicuously in Germany, the banks have financed the Government. The British record of one subscriber in each thirteen of population is about the best foreign record. Our record is one in each six. The share of our banks was in assisting their depositors to subscribe rather than in directly subscribing themselves. Thus one bank in this city sold $30,000,000 worth to about 140,000 depositors, another $3,500,000 to 60,000, another $12,000,000 to 20,000, and so through the list. In some of these cases the totals by the banks are less than half the total for the previous loan, and the number of subscribers increased in greater proportion.

There is a double advantage in this sort of subscription. If the banks financed the Government they could not so easily finance trade and industry, and it is of the first importance that ordinary trade should be accommodated as well as the Government. Secondly, the money which comes from depositors is mostly scattered funds which otherwise would go unused or be wasted. By binding themselves to take the bonds out of pocket money or future earnings the depositors have bound themselves to economy, and have imposed habits of thrift which will fortify the nation's finances mightily.

The figures of individual distribution for the third loan will be more striking, when available, than for the second loan, for which the Treasury has furnished details just as it gives out the totals for the third loan. For the second loan there were issued 7,646,460 coupon bonds of $50 each, and 4,444,452 for $100 each. Of registered bonds the largest number issued was 244,935 for the $100 pieces. These are marvelous figures when it is considered that before the war the number of investors in bonds of all sorts was but a few hundred thousand, and in Government bonds hardly any at all outside of the banks. Millions now are clipping coupons for the first time, and showing that they do not understand the process. It is an education of the most beneficial sort, and with political as well as financial significance. A nation with its bonds held by millions is founded on a rock.

While the figures are given for the big banking districts, there are only incomplete returns for the smaller divisions of the country. Perhaps it never will be known which city, town, or county was most generous toward the Government. Hartford claimed the leadership with 251 per cent. of its quota. Our own Yonkers claimed that its 252 plus per cent. was the leader of the nation. But Whitewater, Kan., with a population of 518, contributed fivefold its quota—and there are others, no doubt. If it is a question of individual leadership the palm may be given, until claimed by another, to the Nebraska farmer commended by President WILSON. LINN F. HANSON sold his farm, divided the proceeds between his church and the Red Cross and a Liberty Loan subscription, and enlisted against the boches.

It is an example worthy of imitation, and should be studied by many who do not appreciate that the Nebraska farmer understands the meaning of this war better than they. If we do not win it our property is forfeited and our institutions are wrecked. Germany is fighting for domination or downfall, for commerce by conquest, for annexations to be exploited by feudal treatment of enslaved peoples. We are fighting for freedom, for a fair field and no favor. The meaning of the subscriptions by millions is that they understand it, and mean to conquer or die. That sentiment already is felt by one family in each two, and should be felt by all. No Presidential election ever showed such unanimity of sentiment as our Liberty Loan referendums. The total of Liberty Loan holders is little less than the largest Presidential vote ever cast, but that was divided among several parties. On the question of liberty or death, now and forever, there is no division of sentiment in this happy land, threatened as never before.

THE RED CROSS THE SECOND LINE OF DEFENSE.

The President of the United States testified to his admiration for the work the Red Cross is doing overseas and at home by marching on foot at the head of the most inspiring parade that New York has seen during the war. The thrill of it will never be forgotten by the devoted men and women who took part in it and by those who saw its columns pass, almost 75,000 strong, under the beloved emblem. Mr. WILSON led in the campaign for the War Fund of $25,000,000. The people of New York will follow him and make it a memorable success.

The campaign is so well organized that War Fund Week will be brought to the attention of everybody within the limits of Greater New York all day long and far into the night. There is hardly a shop, hotel, or restaurant that has not announced a contribution of its receipts for one day or more. Canvassers will be like the sands of the seashore, ubiquitous, appealing, persuasive, irresistible. The women of New York are legion in the good cause. Every form of amusement will be enlisted—the concert stage, the theatres, the moving pictures. New York has a record of $24,300,000 in the first Red Cross campaign, and that must be surpassed, by a wide margin there is reason to hope.

It must be borne in mind that there are now 500,000 soldiers in France, and by the end of the year the American Army will be twice or three times as strong. Most of the war fund to be raised will be used in behalf of American soldiers, to seek and nurse the wounded, to entertain and comfort soldiers back of the lines, to look after the welfare of prisoners in Germany. The fund collected last June, of which no more than 25 per cent. remains now, perhaps less, was devoted chiefly to our allies, and a good deal of it was spent among the refugees in France and Italy. It is, of course, not the purpose of the Red Cross to neglect its wards or to aid in building up stricken communities behind the lines, but the American Army will now become its special concern.

In its war activities the Red Cross is as businesslike and responsible as it is efficient. Its books are methodically kept, every dollar being accounted for. But for volunteer service the expenses would be very much heavier. Considering the magnitude of the work, the operating cost is by no means large. No less than 5,000,000 women employed receive nothing, and ask nothing, for their time and labor. The management of the Red Cross could not be otherwise than responsible under the leadership of HENRY P. DAVISON, who is the hardest working and most faithful of officers, whether at the front inspiring the rank and file or back home furnishing strategy for the war fund campaign.

Contributors to the Red Cross War Fund cannot give too much consideration to the fact that the Red Cross at the front is, as Mr. DAVISON says, holding the second line of defense by keeping up the morale and hopes of the people of France and Italy. The war will be won hardly less by the civilian populations than by the soldiers in the trenches. As an emergency force the Red Cross is resolutely holding the second line, and will continue to stand fast until the war is over. Support it with your contributions early and late. Stand just as resolutely behind it.

WOMAN SOLDIERS.

I notice on the billboards around the city an advertisement of "the first American woman soldier." I have been informed that one MOLLY PITCHER fought at the battle of Monmouth, N. J., in the Revolutionary War, taking the place of her husband, who was killed in that battle.—Letter in Yesterday's TIMES.

Captain MOLLY wasn't the only one. We must not forget NANCY HART of Georgia, gun in hand, driving her ten Tory prisoners into the American camp. But NANCY, prodigious fighter as she was, was not technically a soldier, whereas Captain MOLLY was made a Sergeant on the Monmouth battlefield and subsequently put on the list of half-pay officers for life by act of Congress. She had the right to wear the uniform, and compromised by wearing an artilleryman's coat over her dress and a cocked hat on her red hair. But DEBORAH SAMPSON of Massachusetts was the real woman soldier of the Revolution; she enlisted in the Continental Army, her sex being unsuspected, fought in battle after battle, was wounded, was commended for bravery, and headed military expeditions. She was 21 when she enlisted. Despite her wounds, she managed to escape detection until a serious illness and detention in the hospital revealed her secret, and her comrades were astonished to learn that "Private Robert Shurtleff" was Miss DEBORAH SAMPSON of Uxbridge. General KNOX gave her an honorable discharge; the Massachusetts Legislature voted her an honorarium, Congress put her on the pension roll, and after her death voted a sum of money to her heirs, declaring that "the whole history of the American Revolution records no case like this, and furnished no other similar example of female heroism, fidelity, and courage."

The War of Secession, however, was full of such cases, one of the best known being that of FRANCES HOOK of Illinois, who at the age of 22 enlisted under the name of Frank Miller. Her brother enlisted with her, keeping her secret, and was killed by her side at Shiloh. FRANCES was taken prisoner in the Chattanooga campaign, when the Confederates discovered her sex. They exchanged her for a man. There were many others, FANNY WILSON of New Jersey, MARY OWENS of Pennsylvania (who went with her husband, saw him killed, was wounded in the same fight, and took part in three battles), and Major BELLE REYNOLDS of Illinois, who got her commission for bravery, but she made no effort to conceal her sex. Most famous of all was Major PAULINE CUSHMAN; the Union scout and spy. On the Confederate side the best known was Captain BELLE BOYD, who got her commission at the hands of STONEWALL JACKSON after an exploit which saved his army from destruction. Next in celebrity on the Southern side was Mme. L. J. DE VELAZQUEZ, who disguised herself as a man, entered the army under the name of Harry Buford, and became a Lieutenant through her bravery in action. After it was learned that she was a woman the Confederate Government employed her in secret service work.

Perhaps the advertisement meant "the first American woman soldier in this war." Even then it is open to doubt. One imitator of DEBORAH SAMPSON and FRANCES HOOK got nearly to France before she was discovered, and there may be others. How many enlisted in the War of Secession will never be known, for usually the fact was never revealed until the woman happened to be wounded. In THE NEW YORK TIMES of July 13, 1863, among the local items is the account of the arrest of a woman named MARY SEIZGLE for wearing a soldier's uniform. It turned out that she had a right to wear it, having just returned from the battle of Gettysburg, in which she had taken part with the 41st New York Volunteers. In THE NEW YORK TIMES of May 22, 1863, is a letter from a soldier telling of the surprise of his comrades of the 1st Kansas when they found that a Sergeant, who had just died, and "by the side of whom they had marched and fought for almost two years," was a woman. She had fought, he said, in a dozen battles and skirmishes. "She was as brave as a lion in battle, and never flinched from any duty or hardship that fell to her lot." No one, of course, ever learned her real name. Death revealed her. Who knows how many others went unrevealed?

NEW YORK'S POSTAL FACILITIES.

The Post Office Appropriation bill contains several items of specific interest to this city, and which will fasten interest upon the bill until it shall have passed the conference stage in which it now is. Not until the bill shall have been signed can the postal pneumatic tubes be considered safe. There have been a series of department reports condemning the tubes and a series of Congressional reports favoring them. The difference between the two sets of reports is that the Congressional reports are detached in their interest, and, therefore, on the merits.

The department reports reflect the prejudices or policy of the department. When the head of the Post Office service declares that he would not work the tubes if given to the department, and expresses himself to the effect that the owners of the tubes are seeking to unload them upon the Government by methods of doubtful sincerity, he gives a cue to which his subordinates respond when they report to the same effect. When the Postmaster General condemns the tubes as useless he antagonizes reports of civic organizations of all the cities where the tubes are working. No city has praised the economy of the department so far as it depends upon the stoppage of the tube service, and all cities deprecate the loss of the facility to whose utility they testify. Even the Postmaster General uses the tubes to gather and distribute mail for his flying service. It is an interesting innovation, and standing by itself deserves all praise. But it is clear that delivery of the mail in the suburbs loses all the speed of the journey by the delays at the terminals.

No automobile service could deliver the air mail, or the regular mail, with such thoroughness and speed as the tubes. The attempt to do so has brought down on the wheeled service denunciations for recklessness and fatalities. Not long ago the Postmaster General denounced what he called the lobbying methods of those who wanted to save the tubes. Last week he personally was lobbying against the tubes, and thus far in vain. The votes against him have been decisive. He has done enough for his credit in opposing this extravagance. Nobody can reproach him with it. It is time for him to cease his opposition and bow to the repeated decisions against him. Others are responsible for the tube service.

The bill in its present form also provides that letters shall be carried between the boroughs of this city for the local two-cent fare enjoyed by all other cities. Probably there was no intention to discriminate against New York in the requirement that New York alone should have a three-cent rate between its different sections. It seems to have happened because the Government regards the postal districts as outside the territory of each other. Ordinary citizens know nothing about the boundaries of the postal districts. People who mail letters regard New York City as one geographical and political division, and are irritated when they discover that the Government divides the city for rate purposes. The request for an interborough local rate is not a request for a favor or privilege. It is only asking for New York what other cities have. It is not merely a question of postage. It is a question of annoyance in using the facilities of the Post Office, as the underpaid letters are penalized, however inadvertently the postage is underpaid. The city's Congressmen have done well in carrying these proposals so far, and they should not relax their vigilance until there is security against disappointments hitherto experienced at similar advanced stages of this legislation.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Great Loss as Well as a Great Grief.

There is nothing, of course, that can change the death of such a man as Captain RESNATI from a deeply deplorable calamity. It is that not alone in what may be called the personal sense—the one felt by the relatives and friends who knew and appreciated him as a man. There is a second and broader sense in which his death is a misfortune and a cause of sorrow literally to millions who knew of him only what the newspapers had recorded of his achievements as an aviator.

For it was in that capacity that from the beginning of the war he had devoted the courage he shared with the good soldiers in all armies and a special and remarkable skill in the management of airplanes, developed in a degree uncommon even in his own class, to the one immediately and supremely important task that confronts the world—that of defeating the German. By his life, therefore, Captain RESNATI served Italy no more than he did the other nations joined in the accomplishment of that task, and Italy's loss from this point of view is no greater than that of the United States, of Great Britain, or of France.

In this extension of both service given and of recognition earned, the aviator is not, indeed, peculiar. All, in and out of uniform, who are doing what they can, and all they can, to bring the war to its one tolerable termination may have the satisfaction that lies in the thought of sacrifices offered in a larger cause than any single flag could symbolize.

There was for us, when the news of Captain RESNATI'S death first came, a pang which the peoples of other countries were spared, for the report was that he was flying, when he fell, an airplane of American manufacture, and into most of our minds must have flashed the fear that some traitor here had tampered with his machine. Rumors of such crimes by German agents long have been in circulation as explaining some of the accidents on our flying fields. Fortunately for our peace of mind, the report was not true. The machine was made in Italy, and it seems to have been in perfect order.

So far as known, the Captain fell only because in his ardor he attempted a flight before he had fully recovered from a recent illness and, therefore, before he had regained that full possession of every power which aviation requires. His loss is not the less on that account, but it relieves us of a cruel responsibility that would have been almost unbearable.

He Talks Like a Maniac.

Difficult as it is to understand how the Kaiser dared to say, as he stood by the graves of his soldiers in Aachen, "It was not by my will that the war has come," there is a remote possibility that he spoke the truth or some approach to it. That he did will not be believed outside of Germany, but it may be that he had not complete control of the military class he nominally commands, and he was himself in some measure compelled to give the fatal order that has come so near to wrecking and ruining the whole world.

However that may be—and it strains credulity to admit the possibility—there is no like explanation as to how the Kaiser could twice within a week express the wish that the Germans at home could see what he has seen of devastated France and so be enabled to realize the ills they had been spared and the gratitude they owed to their armies. That is a mystery deserving of what is called "intensive study"—a problem for the psychologists of schools old and new.

This wish, as formulated, involves the assumption that Germany would have suffered what France has suffered had her armies not been thrown so promptly across the frontier. But that assumption could be made only by an insane man—by a man who reasons from premises unrelated to any reality except the illusions created by a disordered brain. It is directly contradicted by the international situation as it existed in 1914. There was nowhere then any thought of declaring war on Germany—nowhere any wish to ravage her fields, bombard her towns, or murder her people. So far was it from there having been aggressive intentions against her that there were no preparations for defensive action in the then unimaginable case that she would do what she did.

And yet the Kaiser, in what really seems to be sincerity, says that if the German civilians could walk the battlefields with him they would know what they have been "spared"! Other men—TAMERLANE, GENGHIS KHAN, ATTILA—have desolated lands not their own with fire and sword, but never, so far as history tells, did they claim that thus their own homes were spared like horrors. They knew what they were doing and they did not deny their motives to others or to themselves.

This Table Needs Interpretation.

When carelessly inspected, the daily "summary of army casualties to date" seems to contradict the claim so often made since this war began that no longer is it true that the soldier's greatest danger is from disease. The false impression comes from comparing with the number set down as "died of disease" only the one that follows the words "killed in action."

The former number is, indeed, twice as large as the latter, but even if that were the whole story, it still would mark an enormous advance in military sanitation and hygiene made since a date as recent as our war with Spain. It is not the whole story, however, nor is the comparison fair.

To realize how much better now is the care taken of the soldier when he is not under fire, there must be added to those "killed in action" those who perish by "accident," those set down as "died of wounds," those "lost at sea" and the victims of "gas and other causes." For none of these is the army surgeon in any way responsible, any more than he is for the "captured" and the "missing," and when they are all added together the item "died of disease" is reduced, relatively, to proportions that fully justify the claims made in the surgeon's behalf.

He ought to be credited, too, with much of the wonderful physical improvement that is shown by such a great majority of the recruits within a few weeks after they enter the service. If civilian doctors could speak with as much authority to their patients and clients as do their colleagues in the army and the navy—if they could work as much for prevention and no less for cure—like marvels could be accomplished at home as in the field.

FARMERS' TRAINING CAMPS.

Experts Needed for Agriculture as Well as for the Field of Battle.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While so much public opinion has lately been focused on speeding up the adequate preparation of our soldiers, with the inspiring Third Liberty Loan posters spelling the glory of their success at every turn, we Americans have been brought as never before to a keen realization of warfare. We in this country feel that we can almost see the torn battlefront of Picardy and even the expression on some of the boys' faces. But we are only beginning to appreciate that great backer of the soldier, the farmer. Of course, we all know by heart the various slogans of "Food Will Win the War, Don't Waste It," &c., but do we, right down at the bottom of our souls, realize that the farmer must, in a sense, go "over the top" and be prepared to do it? Do we realize that America is called upon to furnish young men who are willing to sacrifice themselves in order to produce food? We too often think of the farmers of this country as being "only" the second line of defense. But we do not fully realize that the generals of food production have been ordered to attack first.

I am fully confident that this Summer, when we begin to read the inevitably long casualty lists of our boys in France, millions at home will be filled with an ambition to grow food to feed the soldiers. It will not only be a case of "Every Scout Feed a Soldier," but every available man, woman, and child will try to do a share of the feeding. There will be no lack of patriotism on the fields over here, any more than there is a lack of patriotism on the fields "over there."

But though great and patriotic service will be given on the farms this Summer, are we not in a grave danger of minimizing the wide-reaching effect of agricultural training and thinking that food can be produced by any one? Our prospective food producers must have knowledge or else much food will be produced less economically than necessary, or much will not be produced at all. Last year hundreds of people were exhorted into planting as much as they possibly could, but were not told, nor had they the knowledge, that one man can usually plant as much as six men can cultivate and as much as a dozen men can harvest and market for the ultimate consumer.

In the national army we have recognized the need of officers' training camps, because men of ambition and ability were needed who could, in the shortest possible time, be trained as officers to instruct and lead thousands of others. We need the same advantages for our great food army. Many old-time farmers are not fit to farm, much less to instruct. Our war has caused fertilizer and labor problems undreamed of heretofore. Now, and in the years to come, agricultural problems will present themselves which are capable of solution only by trained minds. It is not labor, and raw labor, alone which will solve our problems. There are many men who could well devote themselves to agricultural problems who have been rejected by our army and navy for a cause which would not interfere with a life of agriculture. But those men must have greater opportunities for obtaining agricultural training. This training must be condensed and given as a war measure at a rate much faster than it is now given in the agricultural colleges. I plead for a recognition of the importance and necessity of O. T. C.'s—for farmers.

THE KNITTERS.

Day in and day out, and in all kinds of weather,
America's women are knitting together;
"We're knitting with joy, and we're knitting with tears,
Each stitch holds our love, and our hopes and our fears—
We're knitting, we're knitting!

"We're making these garments for gallant defenders,
An army of freemen that never surrenders,
For men who are fighting for you and for me,
In the fields and the trenches far over the sea—
We're knitting, we're knitting!

"Click, click, go the needles, while fond hearts are beating,
Each stitch holds a sigh and a tenderest greeting;
They'll comfort the boys; they will serve to inspire,
For each stitch holds a spark of a patriot's fire—
We're knitting, we're knitting!

"We're knitting for all that is noble and glorious,
The star-spangled banner, which must be victorious;
While women will toil, and our manhood will dare,
Let the foes of our country take heed and beware—
We're knitting, we're knitting!"

LEON HUEHNER.

PESSIMISTS OF 1918.

Historic Parallels for Those Who Are Too Much Impressed by Germany's Temporary Gains.

By Mr. JUSTICE RUSSELL, of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When the late Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote for the Atlantic Monthly his paper on his search for the Captain—said Captain being now Mr. Justice Holmes of the United States Supreme Court—he quoted the cry of the Roman populace "Panem et circenses" and gave it a modern and a wartime turn. Bread and the newspaper, he said, was what the people were calling for in those anxious and perilous days.

It is so with us today—save that the truth is, or a few days ago the truth certainly was, that some if not many among us hardly dared to open our newspaper lest we should learn of some new colgn of vantage that the enemy had gained against us overnight, or of some new and imminent and deadly peril to which our brave boys were about to be exposed. No wonder if in these terrible days men's hearts are failing them for fear that some of the more faint-hearted among us have even begun to doubt whether our armies are indeed invincible and whether, notwithstanding all our labors and our sacrifices of blood and treasure by land and sea, it may not be that the finger of destiny is pointing to the downfall of the British Empire and to the world sovereignty of the all-conquering German.

Amid these fears and misgivings which are not yet wholly dissipated, we shall do well to recall the profound and consolatory saying of Emerson, who tells us that the lesson of life is to believe what the years and the centuries say against the hours. The lesson of history is indeed precisely this, and we read our histories in vain if we do not learn from them to trust the teaching of the years against the ephemeral appearances of the hours, and the teaching of the centuries against what may seem to be the meaning of the dark and troubled years.

The present ruler of Germany is not the first or the only monster to dream of the mastership of the world, and there is a close similarity between some parts of his procedure and that of his predecessor in the early years of the preceding century. To bring out this parallel let us imagine, if we have not seen, the war map designed to illustrate the manner in which the German Kaiser and his Prussian war lords have carried out in the eastern arena of the conflict and at the expense of Russia their benign policy of "no annexations and no indemnities."

At the northeastern corner of the Baltic is the Province of Esthonia, torn from the domains of Russia and about to be erected into a quasi-independent political community. Circling the Gulf of Riga is Livonia, and just below Livonia is Lithuania, to be dealt with on the lines of the same political strategy, Poland and the Ukraine, the former once part of an independent kingdom parceled up and divided among a gang of imperial brigands, the other severed in our own day from the newly established democracy which seemed to our ardent hopes to be entering upon a promising career of freedom and progress. A little further to the east we have the lands of the crushed and despoiled Rumanians, stretching to the shores of the Black Sea.

Thus, from the northeastern corner of the Baltic to the western shore of the Black Sea we have this great range of provinces large and small, all but one of them torn from Russia and her allies by an unjust and aggressive war or a yet more contemptible because a tricky and illusory peace; Esthonia, Livonia, Lithuania, Poland, the Ukraine and Rumania, all to be under the hegemony of Prussia, vassal states of Germany, probably enough, just as a great part of the Continent of Europe in the former century was carved into kingdoms and placed under the nominal sovereignty of the brothers of Napoleon, to be parceled out among the sons and sons-in-law of the German Kaiser, or to be converted into so many Alsace-Lorraines for the glorification of the House of Hohenzollern.

The parallel to all this is found by a writer in the last number of the Fortnightly Review over the nom de plume of "Fabricius" in the so-called Confederation of the Rhine, which was brought into being by Napoleon in the early years of the century preceding this. The writer begins his history with the gathering of the naval and military forces of Napoleon at Boulogne in 1805 for the purpose of invading England, an undertaking which might easily have succeeded had it not been for the splendid seamanship and bravery of Nelson and his invincible navy. The project had to be abandoned in favor of the more promising enterprise of destroying Austria, isolating Prussia, and eventually dominating the Continent of Europe.

In order to execute this program, he instructed his Minister, the famous Talleyrand, to write to the Electors of Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden, announcing to them his determination that they were no longer to remain neutral between him and his enemies, that they must take sides with him or at once elect to be treated as his foes. Their friendship was to be rewarded with acquisitions at the expense of the minor states and principalities of the German Confederation. In the event of their enmity, he would know how to deal with them. As for "that bag of bones," the Austrian Emperor, he was to be informed that Napoleon would be in Vienna in November. Does it not sound like the boast attributed to the German Kaiser that he would eat his Christmas dinner in Paris in 1914? The essential difference between the two cases is precisely the difference between Napoleon and his Prussian imitator. Wilhelm did not eat his Christmas dinner in Paris in 1914, nor yet in 1915, nor in 1916 or 1917. If he is destined to eat any dinner in Paris in 1918 we may safely believe that it will be the most indigestible meal that passed the portals of the imperial stomach. Napoleon did get to Vienna in November, if not before. In October, 1805, the great fortress of Ulm was taken and 23,000 prisoners were taken. On Dec. 26 the battle of Austerlitz was fought and Austria lay prostrate at the foot of the Conqueror.

What schoolboy has not read of the anguish of England's patriotic Prime Minister when he heard the news of Austerlitz—how he pointed to the map of Europe hanging on the wall and said, "Roll up that map; it will not be wanted these ten years"? Austerlitz, as Wilberforce wrote in his diary, killed Pitt. The great statesman and patriot died in January, and those who bent over him caught, as his spirit was passing, a faint murmur: "My country! How I leave my country!"

The practical annexation of Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden, with Saxony, Westphalia, and other States constituting the Confederation of the Rhine, added to Napoleon's dominions an area equal in extent to that of the United Kingdom and increased the subject population by 50 per cent., adding 14,000,000 to the population of France, already numbering 29,000,000. Austria was crushed by the victory of Austerlitz in December, 1805. Prussia's turn came at Jena in 1806. The peace of Tilsit brought Russia to terms in 1807, and the whole of Continental Europe was under the heel of the Corsican brigand.

That surely was the day when the pessimist should have flourished. Could he not well exclaim with the old mediaeval saint amid the horrors and desolations by which he was surrounded, that God and His saints were sleeping, or, "like the hero in Tolstoy's 'War and Peace' when he sees the bright-faced peasant and the pale mechanic shot dead by his side, and the bodies still warm thrown into the trench, might he not be tempted to say with him in rebellion against a world in which such things could be, not in the mood in which the fool crieth, but in the anguish of a tender soul wrung by such stupendous iniquity, 'There is no God?'"

Such might have been the reflections and feelings of the pessimist—nay, not merely the reflections of the pessimist, but the reasonable misgivings of many a sane and not too pessimistic observer contemplating the apparently hopeless conditions of the European world. But such a one would have failed to take proper account of those "imponderables" of which even so materialistic a statesman as Bismarck was not entirely unconscious. He would have neglected to take into his reckoning those moral forces by which in the last analysis the course of human affairs is governed. If one had learned in those dark and trying days the lesson of life from Emerson, to believe what the years and the centuries say against the hours, might he not well have apostrophized the departed spirit of William Pitt in the noble lines of Wordsworth's sonnet to the memory of Toussaint L'Ouverture?

> Powers that will work for thee—air, earth, and skies!
> There's not a breathing of the common wind
> That will forget thee. Thou hast great allies.
> Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
> And love, and man's unconquerable mind.

If it could only have been given to Pitt to pierce the veil of the future, he would have known that before the full expiration of the period for which he wished his map of Europe to be furled, the affairs of his beloved country would again open up a hopeful vista to the eye of humanitarian patriotism. He would have foreseen Wellington's long and arduous but ultimately successful campaigns in Portugal and Spain, he would have followed the steady and progressive steps by which the Iron Duke continued from year to year to drive the Corsican intruder back within the limits of his own kingdom. He would have seen in his apocalyptic vision the disastrous Russian campaign of 1812, the battle of the nations, known as the Völkerschlacht to our German friends of those happier days when Germany was on the side of God and the angels, the better known to us as the battle of Leipsic, in 1813. He would have foreseen the total collapse of the confederation of the Rhine, the assembly of the Allies in Paris, the retreat of the Corsican adventurer to the little island of Elba, the stirring and alarming interlude of "the hundred days," the sanguinary but glorious field of Waterloo, and the perpetual exile of the greatest criminal of the century to the rocky solitudes of St. Helena.

But Pitt died in spiritual pain and sorrow because his eyes were holden and his spirit clouded. No wonder that his foresight could not penetrate the veil of the future or his faith anticipate its coming events. But with these lessons of history to aid and befriend us our eyes should not be darkened and our faith should not fail. Indeed, are darkened if we do not, if we have not faith to believe that whatever may be the vicissitudes of our military fortune, through whatever Gethsemanes of pain and sorrow our people may yet be called to suffer, we can only be one end to the struggle. The world was not made to be the football of Alexanders and Attilas, the field of lawless ambition for Napoleons and Hohenzollerns.

Our pessimists and prophets of evil, like the poor, will, doubtless, always be with us. Even when there was hardly a cloud upon the national horizon, an author that filled a large place in the mental outlook of the past generation of readers moaned over the evident decline of his country. He had a conviction which haunted him, he said, at times, and almost overwhelmed him with depression, that there was a real and almost imminent danger of England losing immeasurably in all ways and declining into a sort of greater Holland. Doubtless it was under some such distressing conviction as this that Matthew Arnold drew his picture of the Weary Titan, under which form he arraigns his country, in sympathy with the critic over whose grave he bewails her shortcomings. "I chide the not," he exclaims at the grave of Heine.

> That thy sharp
> Upbraidings often assailed
> England, my country—for we,
> Heavy and sad for her sons
> Long since, deep in our hearts
> Echo the blame of her foes.
> We, too, sigh that she flags;
> We, too, say that she now
> Scarce comprehending the voice
> Of her greatest golden-mouthed sons
> Of a former age lay more,
> Stupidly travels her round
> Of mechanic business and lets
> Slow die out of her life
> Glory and genius and joy.
> . . . . . .
> Yes, we arraign her! But she,
> The weary Titan with deaf
> Ears and labour-dimmed eyes,
> Regarding neither to right
> Staggering on to her goal;
> Bearing on shoulders immense,
> Atlantean, the load
> Well-nigh not to be borne
> Of the too vast orb of her fate.

What would this refined and scholarly pessimist of a past generation say of his country if he could have lived to see her as she appears among the nations today, bearing on shoulders immense, Atlantean, not only the too vast orb of her own fate, but the burden of the world's salvation from the greatest peril by which it ever yet was menaced; confronting the mighty hosts of a barbarism more dangerous and destructive than that of Attila, by as much as it is more scientifically equipped and more skilfully marshaled. He would have seen his countrymen confronting the enemy, of humankind with resources and labors never before equaled in the annals of the nation, and with bravery and devotion and endurance never excelled in the whole history of the human race. Surely he would have repented his pessimism and suppressed his arraignment. That the loss to literature would have been substantial I must frankly acknowledge; for one of the finest passages in the English language would have remained unwritten. But for a sursum corda in these depressing and terrible days I must give my preference to the Spartacan strains of Gerald Massey, which I doubt not the critical taste of our amiable pessimists of Fox How would regard with lofty literary scorn:

> The old nursing mother's not hoary yet,
> There is sap in her Saxon-tree.
> Lo! She lifteth a bosom of glory yet,
> Through her mists to the sun and the sea.
> Old England still throbs with the manliest fire
> Of a past she can never forget,
> And again shall she banner the world up higher,
> For there's life in the old land yet.

Halifax, May 6, 1918.

PRESIDENT DEPARTS; ENDS VACATION HERE

Hears War Sermon, Visits Pelham Bay Training Camp, and Walks in Fifth Avenue.

LUNCHEON AT DODGE HOME

Children Invited to Meet Him—Greeted Heartily by Sunday Crowds.

President Wilson's vacation, as he yesterday termed his three-day visit in New York, ended at midnight last night when he and Mrs. Wilson, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, his personal physician, and Joseph P. Tumulty, his private secretary, returned to Washington on a Pennsylvania train.

The President's day yesterday, which he had set apart for rest, included attendance at the Brick Presbyterian Church in the morning, luncheon at the home of Cleveland H. Dodge, who presided at the Red Cross meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House on Saturday night, and an excursion to the Pelham Bay Naval Reserve cantonment, where the President was cheered to the echo by the 4,000 young men training there for service in the navy.

His seventy-two hours' relaxation from affairs in Washington apparently did the President much good, for when he nodded good-bye to the enthusiastic crowds last night, the lines of worry, noticeable when he arrived last Friday, seemed to have disappeared.

President and Mrs. Wilson and Admiral Grayson left the Waldorf a little after 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and walked to the Brick Presbyterian Church, at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, where he heard a war sermon preached by a man who had served in the trenches, the Rev. Dr. R. Bruce Taylor, formerly Chaplain of a Canadian Highland regiment. The pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. W. P. Merrill, was in Princeton for the day.

A small crowd outside of the Waldorf watched the party go, the men raising their hats as the President passed. There was no loud cheering. When the party was seated in church, and the congregation became aware of their presence, there was a flutter of excitement, and a general turning of heads. Dr. Taylor's vigorous sermon, however, soon held the attention of everybody, and none listened more closely than President Wilson. In the course of the sermon, the Canadian clergyman touched upon our attitude toward the war.

Fight as Trustees of Liberty.

"It is difficult for us to appreciate at such a distance from the scene of the conflict that we are at war," he said. "It is a war that represent the crisis of civilization, and by the way in which we realize this fact so shall we be judged. There must be no side-stepping, no sentimentality about it. You are in the fight as trustees of liberty handed down to you by your forefathers, and must be, as we all are, out to win it.

"We in Canada have made a great many mistakes, and they have been paid for in flesh and blood. You, too, I suspect, will also make mistakes, but patience must be exercised with those who have the great burdens of this war on their shoulders."

After the services the congregation stood while the President and Mrs. Wilson left the church with their attendant guard of Secret Service men. Outside in the avenue a great crowd had gathered and was waiting patiently in the hot sun for just a glimpse of the President and perhaps a chance to wish him well.

A cheer went up as he came out, which, although not so noisy as some that the President has heard during his visit here, yet lacked not a bit of good-will and sincerity. The persons in the crowd also showed their regard for the President by the courteous manner in which they gave him room so that the offices of the detectives were not needed. Mrs. Wilson smiled upon the crowd, and the President stopped a moment and raised his hat.

At the church the President and Mrs. Wilson got into an automobile, and were driven to the home of Colonel Edward M. House, whom he later took on a drive through Central Park. The party, including Colonel House and Mrs. House, then went to Mr. Dodge's home in Riverdale, where they had luncheon.

Word that the President was at the Dodge home brought out a number of neighborhood children who gathered in a wide-eyed, eager group outside. They were invited to come inside, and to their delight had an opportunity to shake hands with President Wilson.

Visits Navy Boys.

After luncheon the President was taken for an automobile ride, and at his own request was driven out to the naval training station at Pelham Bay. He did not at first intend to go in, but the sight of a trim young sailor on guard at the gate seemed to change the President's mind and, stopping the machine, he asked a Secret Service man to ask the young sailor to come over.

The young man approached, facing the President, whom he at first did not recognize, with his rifle held rigidly at port. As the tall man leaned out of the car to question him as to the road through the cantonments, the sailor suddenly became aware who was talking to him. He did not lose his self-possession and answered the questions concisely and accurately, but the rifle, held at an angle across his heart, trembled a bit.

As the big machine rolled through the gates of the cantonment there were at least a thousand student sailors in Summer white on the grounds and perhaps twice as many visitors. At first they were as ignorant as the guard of the identity of the man in the big black limousine who was watching them so intently. In one corner they were changing guard and so intent upon the instructions from the petty officer that not one glanced up.

It was not long, however, before the word spread that the President was a visitor at the cantonment and the bluejackets began to crowd forward whenever his machine came into sight. The cheers they gave him as he passed were by no means diminished for Sunday observance either, and the President, immensely pleased, bowed again and again to the young men who seemed so glad to see him.

An Ensign who heard of the visitor sent a hurry call to Commander W. B. Franklin in charge of the camp, and the latter came over at once. He reached headquarters just as the President's car drew up and when the President opened the door to shake his hand, he urged President Wilson to review the sailors and make them a speech.

"No, I think not this time," said the President, with a smile. "I am just on a little vacation. I want to congratulate you, however, Commander, on your men. I have enjoyed my visit here very much indeed."

The party returned to the Waldorf for dinner, and word was issued to the Secret Service men to be ready to go to the train with the President at 10 o'clock. During his absence a young man called at the hotel and aroused the suspicions of the detectives there by insisting on seeing the President. He was questioned and said that he only wanted to give the President a fountain pen, which he had with him. He was later sent away as harmless.

Just before dinner at 6:30 the President and Mrs. Wilson came down by themselves in the elevator, and, accompanied by a half dozen guards, went out for a walk. They went down Thirty-third Street to Sixth Avenue, from there to Twenty-third Street, and up Fifth Avenue to the hotel. As they passed, men and women were startled at the sight of the President and saluted him, raising their hats.

By 9:30 another big crowd had collected around the Thirty-third Street entrance of the hotel to see the last of the President. Several people went inside also to wait. One old couple came in at 7 o'clock and, seating themselves in the lobby, announced that they had never seen the President and would not leave until they had had a glimpse of him. They said they had heard he was going back at midnight and were prepared to wait until that time.

The President and Mrs. Wilson, accompanied by Admiral Grayson, left the hotel for the train shortly after 10 o'clock, going directly to the private car which brought them to New York. The crowd burst into shouts when they saw the President, calling out "Good-bye, Mr. President; don't forget to come back again; we're for you."

At the station he was met by Stationmaster Egan and escorted on board the private car, the "Superb."

Before he left the President expressed himself as well pleased with the way the New York police had cared for him. The last man to shake hands with him before he went inside the car was Inspector Faurot, to whom the President said:

"The police arrangements were ideal, Inspector. I want to thank you for them."

WAR FUND FOR BLIND JEWS.

Association to Raise $25,000 to Care for Returned Soldiers.

A patriotic meeting, under the auspices of the Hebrew Association for the Blind, was held yesterday at the University Settlement, 134 Eldridge Street, to raise a fund of $25,000 to carry on its work and be prepared to care for blind Jewish soldiers returning from France. The meeting was the first to be held in America where blind persons, unable to take part in war work, gathered together to express their loyalty to their country.

The association, headed by Benjamin Berinstein, is run largely by blind people. They themselves are undertaking to raise the emergency fund and to obtain employment for Jewish people who have lost their sight, so that they will be less of a burden to the country. The speakers were Benjamin Berinstein, President, Leo Wolfson, Bleecker Marquette, and the Rev. Herbert S. Goldstein.

FETE FOR GRAMERCY PARK.

Benefit for Soldiers of 307th Regiment to be Held May 28.

A garden party for the benefit of the soldiers of the 307th Regiment and their families will be held in Gramercy Park from 3 until 11 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon and evening, May 28. It is being arranged by Mrs. Walston Hill Brown, the originator of the Regimental Family Unit and the National President of the organization, Mrs. Walter Graeme Eliot, the Chairman of the committee, with whom the Gramercy Park idea originated; Mrs. Lewis B. Woodruff, and others. E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Edwin Markham, and Robert Underwood Johnson will take part. Colonel Boyce's Tigers will parade and many other attractions are being arranged for. Various articles and refreshments will be on sale.

Among those who will give tables or be in charge of them are: Mrs. Samuel P. Blagden, Mrs. MacNeal Swasey, Mrs. Walter Graeme Eliot, the Baroness Olga Serdoben, Mrs. Theus Munds, Mrs. Dudley Davis, the Misses Eleanor Hewitt Green, Candace and Lucy Hewitt, Claire Van Lennep, Sylvia Brown, Katharine Satterlee, and Elinor Kendall, Mrs. Carlton James, and Mrs. LeRoy Satterlee.

Miss Molly Beecher to Marry.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Molly Beecher of Ossining, N. Y., to Lieutenant A. Rivers Genet, U. S. N. V., of the same place. Miss Beecher is a granddaughter of the late Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller of the Supreme Court of the United States and a sister of Miss Sally Beecher and Mrs. Hugh C. Wallace of Washington, D. C. Lieutenant Genet is a brother of Edmond Genet of the Lafayette Escadrille, who was killed about a year ago in France, and is a great-grandson of Citizen Genet, France's first Minister to the United States. The mariage is to take place in June in Ossining.

Son Born to Judge and Mrs. Dike.

A son was born yesterday to Judge and Mrs. Norman S. Dike at their home at 194 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn. Judge Dike married Evelyn Moore Biddle at Glen Cove, L. I., on June 30, 1917.

WANT BOYS FOR A BAND.

Downtown League Issues a Call to Youthful Musicians.

The Downtown League, at 150 Nassau Street, yesterday issued this invitation to youthful musicians to enroll for band work during the period of the war.

The shortage of musicians is being felt in army and navy circles, and this has led a number of patriotic citizens to organize a band of 60 to 100 American boys to add their share toward the great cause. In the downtown district the banks, insurance companies, and mercantile houses have signified their willingness to aid in the organization by permitting any employe between 15 and 21 to enroll in the new band and take part in parades for enlistment purposes and other public functions for the welfare of the United States and the Municipal Government. One of the best bandmasters in New York will assist in forming the band and direct it in its early stages. About thirty-five young musicians have enrolled, and it is desired to add double this number within the next four weeks. Any young man who can play a brass or reed instrument and is the son of a citizen of this country may join the new band.

No remuneration will be given to members of the band, but their uniforms and all the instruments necessary will be supplied by contributions from business men. Application for membership should be directed to the American Marine Band, care the Downtown League, 150 Nassau Street.

INFIRMARY ISSUES APPEAL.

Old Institution Needs $200,000 to Carry On Its Work.

Officers of the New York Infirmary for Women and Children, 321 East Fifteenth Street, established in 1853, by Drs. Elizabeth and Emily Blackwell, said yesterday that conditions forced them to make a public appeal for $200,000, which was needed for the continuation of the work. The Campaign Committee, in its statement of present financial difficulties, said:

For the first time in the history of the institution it makes an appeal to the public for financial assistance. The tremendous and constantly increasing cost of food material and hospital supplies, the need for structural repairs, and the greatly lessened income partly due to the constant and insistent demands for contributions to all kinds of war service, account for the financial crisis that now threatens the further existence of the infirmary.

The medical staff and other friends of the infirmary believe that after sixty-five years of constant, faithful, and efficient service it has become indispensable to the sick women and children in its vicinity.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Treasurer, Dr. Martha Wollstein, 1 West Eighty-first Street.

SAY THEATRES AID IN WAR.

Francis Wilson, E. H. Sothern, and Winthrop Ames Speak at Twilight Club.

The part played by the theatre in the war was the subject of addresses by about a dozen well-known theatrical people last night at a dinner given by the Twilight Club at the Hotel Biltmore. Among those who spoke were E. H. Sothern and Winthrop Ames, who described the part played by entertainment in the life of American soldiers in France; Rachel Crothers, head of the Stage Women's War Relief, who told of the work of that organization; Julia Marlowe, Louis K. Anspacher, and Francis Wilson. About 400 persons were present.

Mr. Wilson spoke of the new dignity which has come to the theatre as a result of the broader appreciation of its necessity in time of stress, and made a plea for a continuation of the appreciation after the war.

"Certainly something strange has happened," he declared. "With the Government investing $2,000,000 in theatres and theatrical enterprises, with the President indorsing the activities of the theatres, and with the Y. M. C. A. and the theatre awakened to a sense of mutual appreciation, there has been a marked disjointment of former prejudices. The power of the theatre for good, which has long been provokingly underestimated, is now beginning to be appreciated.

"It is a noble thing to give pleasure, and it is an honor to be a member of the theatrical profession. The theatre is an emotional necessity in time of stress, and perhaps when the stress is removed there may come a keener appreciation of the fact that the theatre is a blessing to civilization."

Others who spoke were Joseph A. Grismer, shepherd of the Lambs; Channing Pollock, Walter Irwin, and Henri La Fontaine, President of the University of Brussels. Daniel Frohman presided.

50,000 HEAR PARK CONCERT.

350th Field Artillery Band from Camp Dix Wins Applause.

Under the leadership of J. Tim Brymn, the bandmaster, the 350th Field Artillery Band, from Camp Dix, New Jersey, gave a concert at the Mall, in Central Park, yesterday afternoon. More than 50,000 persons listened to and applauded the band. Applause for Private Russell Smith, who played a cornet solo, was second in volume only to that which greeted the leader.

The band, which is composed of seventy-five pieces, led the Red Cross parade on Saturday and it will play at noon today at St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street.

Quits Actors' and Authors' Theatre.

Edwin Milton Royle, who has been President of the Actors' and Authors' Theatre since its formation a little more than a month ago, announced yesterday that he had resigned his office. His withdrawal was under entirely amiable circumstances, he declared, and was brought about by a difference of opinion as to policy and methods. The Actors' and Authors' Theatre is a co-operative organization formed to produce plays, the first of which will be offered this week at the Fulton Theatre. The opening, announced for tonight, has been postponed until Thursday because of changes in the company.

Holy Name Societies Parade.

The Allied Italian Branches of the Holy Name Society of New York Archdiocese held a public demonstration yesterday afternoon to mark their alliance, which took place last March. A parade of about one thousand members of the Italian branches of the Holy Name Society marched from the Nativity Church at Second Street and Second Avenue to the Church of Our Lady Help of Christians at Twelfth Street and Avenue A. After the parade speeches were made by Mgr. Joseph F. Mooney, Mgr. G. Ferrante of the Italian Alliance, and the Rev. Ignatius Smith, Director General of the Holy Name Society in the United States.

O'Leary Trial to Begin Today.

The trial of Jeremiah A. O'Leary, who is charged with having entered into a conspiracy to obstruct the operation of the military laws of the United States, is scheduled to start at 10 o'clock this morning in the Criminal Branch of the Federal District Court. Luther Bedford is a co-defendant in the case. He has demanded a separate trial. O'Leary will be represented by Thomas B. Felder, while Assistant United States District Attorney Earl B. Barnes will prosecute the case for the Government.

WOMEN URGED TO ENROLL.

Suffrage Party Will Distribute 241,000 Pamphlets in City.

The New York City Woman Suffrage Party has printed 241,000 Enrollment Day pamphlets which will be distributed throughout the city to the women voters in the five boroughs, according to an announcement from the headquarters of the organization yesterday. About 25,000 of these pamphlets will be given to school teachers for distribution among parents. The pamphlets urge the women to enroll and tell them why they should. Also, the fact that a woman does not lose her vote in November by failing to enroll is also made clear.

These pamphlets were issued, it was said, because of the numerous queries the Suffrage Party headquarters has been receiving during the last week or so from women who did not understand exactly what was meant by enrollment. In addition to the pamphlets, the district leaders of the party have arranged for a series of meetings all over the city this week, at which the subject of enrollment will be discussed.

"The Woman Suffrage Party is doing its full duty to get the women out to enroll," said Miss Mary Garrett Hay, President of the New York City Woman Suffrage Party, yesterday. Our leaders are setting a good example by enrolling, and I predict that many thousands of women will enroll so that they can vote in the primaries on Sept. 3."

ROBEX-LABORINVESTIGATOR

John McArdle Badly Beaten by Two Men in Brooklyn.

John McArdle, former special investigator of the State Labor Department, was held up, beaten with a blackjack, and robbed in Brooklyn early yesterday morning.

McArdle, who is now business agent of Mailers' Union No. 6, was on the way to his home at 1,723 West Twelfth Street, Bath Beach, when he noticed he was being followed by two men. He had just left the King's Highway station of the Fourth Avenue subway, and at Avenue Q and Twelfth Street the men overtook him. One of the men pushed a revolver against his chest and the other hit him over the head with a blackjack. He was hit again and again and was so badly injured that he was still in bed and under a doctor's care last night.

The thugs took two diamond rings, a watch and chain, and $22 in cash. One of the rings was valued at $350 and was presented to him by the Mailers' Union when he gave up his position as business agent of that organization temporarily some years ago to become an investigator for the Labor Department.

McArdle said last night he believed the assault was committed purely for the purpose of robbery.

AUTO SMASH KILLS SOLDIER

Army Truck Hits Motor Cycle—Corporal Soder the Victim.

One soldier was the victim in one of the series of automobile accidents which occurred yesterday and late Saturday in and near New York. Through confusion of signals an army motor truck crashed into a motor cycle on which Corporal Walter Soder, a member of an aero squadron stationed at Camp Mills, was riding. He suffered a fracture of the skull and died at the base hospital at Mineola. Corporal Soder came from Sea Cliff, L. I. Two of his brothers are in the service.

In avoiding a small boy, Charles Molenkin of 406 Bainbridge Street, Brooklyn, drove his machine into a small crowd at Cooper Street and Myrtle Avenue, where solicitors for Red Cross funds were working, and injured four persons. Policeman James G. Power of 118 Central Avenue, Brooklyn, suffered a sprained back and knee, and three children met with bruises and lacerations.

Patrick F. O'Brien of 634 Baltic Street, Brooklyn, sustained a fractured skull yesterday when he was thrown from the machine driven by Charles Coffi of 215 Warren Street, which came into collision at North and Court Streets with a car operated by Joseph B. Hicks of 634 Baltic Street, Brooklyn.

Frank Trotter, 9 years old, of 785 Malbone Street, Brooklyn, was taken to the Kings County Hospital with serious injuries to the head and body after he had been hit at Albany and East New York Avenues by a machine driven by Benjamin Shurack of 1,964 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

FUNERAL OF W. L. ABINGDON.

More Than 400 Friends of Dead Actor Attend Services.

The funeral of William L. Abingdon, the English actor who committed suicide on Friday night after brooding over the outcome of the war, in which two of his sons are actively engaged, was held yesterday at the Campbell Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street. More than 400 of the dead actor's friends in the theatrical profession attended the ceremony, which was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Nathan Seagle, pastor of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church.

"It was Mr. Abingdon's work to interpret human nature to the world," Dr. Seagle said, speaking of the dead actor's career, "and he did it to perfection. During our twelve years of intimate acquaintance I regarded him as one of my warmest friends." George M. Cohan and De Wolf Hopper, who were to have made addresses at the services were unable to attend.

Many members of the Lambs, Players, Actors', and other clubs of which Mr. Abingdon had been a member were present. Mrs. Abingdon, who was Miss Bijou Fernandez, entered the chapel accompanied by her sister and George Nash, a warm friend of the dead actor. The pallbearers were Joseph Grismer, William Courtleigh, Joseph Kilgour, A. O. Brown, John Milturn, Charles Stevenson, and Cyril Harcourt. Burial was in Evergreens Cemetery, Brooklyn.

CITY BREVITIES.

The annual convention of the Independent Order of Brith Abraham will open on Sunday, May 26, in the New Star Casino, at Lexington Avenue and 110th Street. About 1,400 delegates will attend and Governor Whitman has accepted an invitation to speak.

The Shevuoth festival, with entertainments and exhibits of the work of students, was ended yesterday in the Central Jewish Institute at 125 East Eighty-fifth Street. All the members of the centre were asked to participate.

The General George W. Wingate Athletic League of the public schools in Districts 6 and 7 will have their annual pageant and indoor games in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory next Saturday evening. Pupils from fifteen east side schools will take part.

Dixon's Solve Your Lubrication Problem

Metal-to-metal contact in bearing surfaces causes friction. Unchecked it reduces your power, increases expense and hastens the end of your car's usefulness.

DIXON'S GRAPHITE Automobile LUBRICANTS

put a wear-resisting film of selected flake graphite over the metal surfaces. Dixon's alone prevent grinding and give you a better-running, longer-lasting car.

Ask your dealer for the Dixon Lubricating Chart.

On with the "drive"!

Not a question of "lending," but "giving."

For New York, the quota is $25,000,000.00.

To go "over the top" means an average of $5 for every man, woman and child.

Some will give thousands, while others will find that it pinches to part with a dollar. But what are the pocket-book-hurts compared to the bodyhurts of men who are giving their lives!

Give what you think you can and then give all you can!

Helping The Day's Work

Bodily comfort is the first thing needed for personal efficiency.

Men who are really progressing do not put up with the pinching and constraint of ordinary footwear.

We fit many of them each season at the DR. A. REED CUSHION SHOE stores. It is interesting to see old customers come back again and again, often choosing the same model shoe each time they buy. They find it good business to be efficient by means of the famous cushion.

FINAL SCORE 3 GOALS TO 0

Pennsylvanians Play Invulnerable Game in First Half, but Opponents Do Better Near Close.

For the third time since the annual championship of the United States Football Association for the National Challenge Trophy was inaugurated, five years ago, the famous soccer eleven representing the Bethlehem Steel Company of Bethlehem, Penn., fought its way to victory over the Fall River Rovers of Fall River, Mass., in the replay of the final round at the Federal League baseball grounds at Harrison, N. J., yesterday afternoon.

The first clash at Pawtucket between the champions and last year's winners of the cup ended in a 2-2 tie, but yesterday the steelworkers obtained the verdict by the score of 3 goals to 0, after a gruelling contest which taxed the endurance of the twenty-two players engaged to the limit, and which was watched by an excited crowd of 8,000 enthusiasts.

Throughout the first half the Pennsylvania players had it all their own way, establishing a lead of 2 to 0 and forcing seven corners, none of which, however, directly or indirectly, yielded any result. Not until the second half did the New Englanders obtain corners, and then both shots for goal went behind.

After half an hour of play, Ratican, Bethlehem's speedy centre forward, forced his way through the pack and scored the first goal unassisted.

Two minutes later a penalty was given against C. Byrnes and Fleming took the kick, which was beautifully blocked by Albion. On the rebound Pepper found the net. Duncan, in goal for Bethlehem, had little to do in the first half, but almost collapsed from a blow in the stomach during the second period. Kirkpatrick, Bethlehem's sturdy left half, landed on his neck in a mixup, but recovered after a few minutes.

Twenty minutes after the restart, Fleming centered grandly from the left and Ratican shot the third and last goal of the game. Ferguson played a brilliant game at left back for the victors.

The lineup:

Bethlehem, (3.)	Position.	Rovers, (0.)
Duncan	G.	Albion
Fletcher	R. B.	Booth
Ferguson	L. B.	C. Byrnes
Murray	R. H.	F. Byrnes

Referee—C. E. Creighton, New York. Linesmen—Sam McLearie, Boston, and Joe Booth, Bridgeport. Goals—Ratican, (2.) Pepper, Bethlehem. Time—Halves of 45 minutes.

TAYLOR IN SEMI-FINALS.

Junior Champion Advances in Brooklyn Tennis Tourney.

Two players advanced to the semi-final round of the Brooklyn junior tennis championship at the Terrace Club yesterday afternoon. G. B. Phingst of Philadelphia won his way through in the upper half of the draw when he defeated Percy Kynoston in a hectic three-set match at 6—4, 7—9, 6—2. Below him in the draw Harold Taylor, the Metropolitan junior champion, won an advanced bracket by defeating Frank Anderson at 1—6, 6—3, 6—4.

Phingst and Taylor will therefore meet in the semi-final round. In the boys' tournament Abraham Bassford, 3d, won a semi-final round contest when he defeated W. Aydelotte at 8—6, 6—2.

VETERAN PAIR WINS FINALS.

Steinkampf and Bassford Victors in Harlem Tourney.

Harry J. Steinkampf and Henry Bassford forced their way through to victory in the final round of the Harlem Tennis Club's doubles tournament yesterday afternoon when they defeated Vincent Richards, the national boys' champion, and W. F. Fisher in a sharply waged four-set match at 7—9, 6—2, 6—2, 6—4. It was the perfect coordination of the winners' efforts which more than anything else brought confusion to Richards and Fisher.

MRS. GAVIN LOSES MATCH.

Defeated by Sleepy Hollow Golf Professional in Red Cross Event.

Mrs. William A. Gavin, holder of the women's metropolitan golf championship, was defeated in a handicap Red Cross event at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club yesterday by A. J. Sanderson, the Sleepy Hollow professional, with the score 4 and 3. The women's title holder was hardly at the top of her game, taking an approximate 94 for the course, while Sanderson had an approximate 77. Mrs. Gavin was out in 47, and took a like number of strokes coming in, while Sanderson was out in 39 and back in 38. The extra holes were played out, and it was on the last three that Sanderson did some of his best playing of the day. In each instance he was one under par.

CYCLIST IS BADLY INJURED.

New York Rider in Hospital After Fall at Newark Velodrome.

Arthur Spencer, the national cycling champion, defeated Frank Kramer, the former title holder in two straight heats of a mile match race before the largest crowd of the season at the Velodrome at Newark yesterday. Spencer won the first heat from in front by a little more than a length, and in the second one rode around Kramer, nipping him at the tape and winning by inches.

Louis P. Sattler of 410 East Eighty-second Street, a member of the Century Road Club Association, is in the Newark City Hospital with a possible fracture of the skull and a broken nose, which he sustained in a fall on the steep bank in the third heat of the half-mile amateur race. Sattler complained of not feeling well before the race started, and with a lap to go collapsed, sliding down the track on his face. He was taken to the hospital unconscious and is still there.

NAVAL AUXILIARY VICTOR.

Officers and Enlisted Men Win from Transportation Nine.

Two baseball games between branches of the naval service were played at the Polo Grounds yesterday morning. The games were between the Naval Auxiliary Reserve and the Naval Overseas Transport Service.

The first game was between the enlisted men of the two branches, and was won by the Naval Auxiliary team, 1 to 0. In the second contest, between the officers, victory again went to the Auxiliary Reserves by a score of 7 to 1. The playing of Newman and McGinn was the feature of the officers' game.

Barnes and Hobens Lead on Links.

Jack Hobens, the Englewood Field Club professional, and Jim Barnes of Whitemarsh Valley, earned a victory over two of the amateur golfers, Jerome Travers and Oswald Kirkby, in a thirty-six-hole, four ball best ball match over the Englewood course yesterday, finishing in the lead by 5 and 4.

HEARN SHUTS OUT CARDS.

Allows Only Four Hits, and Boston Triumphs by 1 to 0.

ST. LOUIS, May 19.—Hearn held St. Louis to four hits today and Boston shut out St. Louis 1 to 0. The visitors bunched two of their seven hits off Packard in the second, when Wickland singled, took second on Snyder's high throw to catch him off first, and scored on a single by J. C. Smith.

PITCHING DUEL FOR TYLER.

Cub Southpaw Twirls 3-to-0 Shut-out Against Phillies.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Chicago won the odd game of the series from Philadelphia today when they shut out the visitors, 3 to 0.

The game was a pitching duel between Tyler and Hogg, with the former having the shade because of the ability of the locals to make their hits count. When the Easterners threatened to score on three occasions, fast double plays frustrated their chances.

GIANTS' PITCHERS MAULED BY REDS

Loose Support Upsets Four New York Boxmen and Cincinnati Takes Game, 5 to 1.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, May 19.—The Giants bungled matters terribly in the fourth inning of today's game with the Reds and in that frame Matty's men made enough runs to capture the final game of the series from the league leaders, the final score was 5 to 1.

Jess Barnes, heretofore unbeaten, suffered an ignominious fate today. He was driven from the box in the fourth, though it is true that his troubles were in a large measure due to the damaging errors on the part of his teammates. In all, four Giant pitchers broke into the fray, Jeff Tesreau, Cecil Causey and Al Demaree following in Barnes's footsteps in the order named.

Eller was nicked for ten blows, but had no difficulty in limiting the Giants to one run. The fourth inning began with a muff by Holke of Fletcher's throw of Lee Magee's grounder. Roush dumped a sacrifice bunt in front of the plate, and McCarty, seizing upon the pellet, hurled it over Holke's head, Lee Magee dashing around to third on the error.

Sherwood Magee tripled to right, scoring Lee Magee and Roush, and Griffith singled to right, scoring Sherwood. Neale poked a single to left, and both runners advanced when Barnes threw Blackburne out at first. Wingo was purposely passed, filling the bases. Eller then hit to Zimmerman, who threw to McCarty, forcing Griffith, and McCarty threw to Holke in a futile attempt to double up Eller. Neale, who had rounded third, dashed for the plate, and made it in safety before Holke could get the ball back to McCarty. Barnes couldn't locate the plate for Groh and issued a pass to him, but Lee Magee, up for the second time in that inning, retired the side with a fly to Young.

The Giants had men on the bases in every inning but the first, but they were powerless with the stick on the many occasions when they had a chance to break through and cut down the Reds' lead.

Their lone tally was hung up in the sixth inning. Benny Kauff slugged the ball to the fence in left centre for three bases, and Burns followed with a one-base drive to left that scored Kauff. The game was finished in a pelting rain, which fell from the seventh inning on.

HARD BLOW FOR GIANTS.

Loss of Doyle Serious Handicap on Western Trip.

That Larry Doyle will be lost to the Giants for a much longer time than the club officials care to admit is evident from the fact that Manager McGraw has bought Bert Neihoff to play in Doyle's place at second base. It is stated that while the Giants were playing the Phillies here, just before going West, Manager McGraw realized the seriousness of Doyle's intestinal trouble and immediately started to negotiate with St. Louis for Neihoff's services.

While it is reported that there is much improvement in Doyle's condition since his operation at the New York Post-Graduate Hospital here, the club officials are not counting on Doyle's return to playing form for some time to come. It is feared that it will be many weeks before Doyle will be able to take his regular place at second for the Giants.

The loss of Doyle at a time when he was leading the league with a batting average of .426, and fielding just as well as when he was at his best, is the real reason of the Giants' slump when they invaded the West without Laughing Larry. The sudden loss of such an important factor in the batting order and team play of the club naturally upset it after its wild ride of triumph through the Eastern clubs. The Giants' attack became disarranged and it probably will not get back to its highest point of efficiency again until the new man Niehoff is thoroughly fitted into the club system of play.

In the five games played by the Giants last week they won two and lost three. The falling off in hitting, which was so evident against the Pittsburgh left-handed pitchers, was even more pronounced against Matty's Cincinnati Reds.

The next stand of the Giants is at St. Louis, where McGraw's men should get a chance to recover from their slump. It is certain that the club will have to improve to cope with the Chicago Cubs, a club which is accomplishing much under Manager Mitchell's guidance. Cincinnati went into third place, passing Pittsburgh as a result of their feast on the Giants, but there was no change in the relative positions of the other clubs.

Brooklyn won two games and lost four during the week, and is tied with St. Louis for sixth place in the pennant race. The Dodgers go up against Chicago today, and will have a hard row to hoe. Manager Robinson is badly in need of a reliable pitcher, for none of his present staff has come up to expectations when effective mound work was needed to save a game. Robinson has been trying to buy a pitcher outright, but he has found that none of the other clubs is willing to part with any of their boxmen.

National League officials of the weaker clubs still argue that unless a decided cut is made in the player limit before long that the difference between the strong and weak clubs will be so pronounced that it will hurt interest in the race. If the stronger clubs would turn loose some of their players, which could be brought about by a cut in the player limit, which is now twenty-two, the weaker clubs would get a chance to strengthen with the released players. However, there is so much opposition to this plan from influential clubs like New York and Chicago, that just such a state of affairs is unlikely.

The Yankee pitching continues weak, and all efforts of Manager Huggins to land a new twirler have been in vain. The attitude of American League managers, among the stronger clubs, to aid the weaker clubs by parting with some of their players is no more liberal than in the National League, so the chance of Huggins landing a good experienced pitcher seems slim.

The Yanks won three games and lost two last week, but in their defeat on Saturday showed how really weak their pitching is in a pinch. The Yanks will have their hardest test of the season, beginning today, when they start a series with the world's champion White Sox at the Polo Grounds.

LORENZ SHOWS WAY IN BROOKLYN RUN

Wins Kings County Race from Large Field of Harriers by Margin of 40 Yards.

Brooklyn Athletic Association athletes carried off the lion's share of honors in the open A. A. U. handicap road race of the Kings County A. A., held through the streets of Brooklyn over a course of about four and three-quarter miles yesterday. The large field which finished was led home by J. Lorenz of the Brooklyn A. A., who started with a 3:45 handicap, and crossed the finish line in 25:46.

The time prize was captured by A. Craw, a Brooklyn A. A. representative, who finished in ninth position from the 1:45 mark. His time was 24:17. This was four seconds slower than the time made by Charles Pores of Pelham Bay Naval Training Station, former senior metropolitan cross-country champion, who started from scratch.

The order of finish of the first twenty-five follows:

POWE WINS 440-YARD RUN.

Captures Chief Event in Alpha P. C. C. Members' Games.

Walter Powe of the Alpha P. C. C. romped home an easy winner yesterday in the 440-yard handicap run, one of the chief events at the club's handicap members' games at Macomb's Dam Park. Powe, starting from scratch, quickly cut down his rivals' handicap allowances and with a burst of speed near the finish line drew into a comfortable lead. His time was 54 2-5 seconds.

Six events were decided, providing keen competition. Charles Hill won two events, gaining first in the 100-yard dash, with a two-yard handicap allowance, and winning the 220-yard dash from the five-yard mark. In the running high jump Louis Watson carried off first honors from scratch with a jump of 5 feet 10 inches.

In a one-mile medley relay race the team of the Jersey Harriers A. A. scored a rather easy victory over the Mohawk A. C. Athletes of the Glencoe A. C. finished third in this race, but were disqualified for not properly touching off. The place was therefore awarded to the Pastime A. C. quartet.

MORSE TAKES TWO RACES.

Wins 100 and 220 Yard Events at St. Christopher Games.

With two victories to his credit in the four-event program, Roy F. Morse, former junior national A. A. U. 100-yard champion, was the greatest point winner in the handicap members' games of the St. Christopher Club at Macomb's Dam Park yesterday. Morse won the 100-yard dash from scratch in 10 seconds and the 220-yard event, also from the honor mark, in 22 2-5 seconds. Scratch athletes also fared favorably in the other two events.

SAILORS WIN TRACK HONORS

Pelham Bay Athletes Take Three Events in Staten Island Meet.

Sailors of Uncle Sam in training at Pelham Bay Naval Training Station played an important rôle yesterday in the track and field meet held at Mount Loretto, Staten Island, for the benefit of the orphan inmates of the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin.

The three naval triumphs were scored by P. Starke in the eight-pound shot-put; E. Anderson, in the running broad jump, and the Pelham Bay team in the medley relay race. Stark put the shot a distance of 57 feet 2 inches; Anderson, from scratch, accomplished 19 feet 1 inch in the broad jump, and the relay quartet won this event comfortably.

One of the most interesting races of the day came in the 1,000-yard handicap run, in which Jack Sellers of the New York A. C. pulled through with a victory from the scratch mark.

The summaries:

100-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by J. Leavitt, unattached, (3 yards;) M. Voeiki, Morningside A. C., (3 yards,) second; P. K. Walters, Paulist A. C., (scratch,) third. Time—0:10 2-5.

GREGORY ISSUES WARNING.

No Change in Waterfront Pass System During Summer.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Attorney General Gregory today called attention to the importance of the observance during the Summer season of the waterfront pass system which has been in effect under Presidential proclamation, barring German alien enemies from waterfront properties.

"The fact that during the approaching Summer season the use of the waterfront docks and other waterfront facilities throughout the United States will be greatly increased," says the announcement authorized by the Attorney General today, "makes it proper that the attention of the public and of the owners and operators of waterfront facilities should again be called to Regulation 13 of the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, and the waterfront pass system inaugurated thereunder by the Department of Justice, which is vested by the President with the authority to enforce the regulation mentioned.

"Regulation 13 applies exclusively to German alien enemies, male and female. It provides that such alien enemies shall not approach or be found within 100 yards of any canal, nor of any wharf, pier, or dock used directly by or by means of lighters by any vessels or vessel of over 500 tons gross, engaged in foreign or domestic trade other than fishing; nor within 100 yards of any minal, or other terminal, storage or transfer facility adjacent to or operated warehouse, shed, elevator, railroad ter- in connection with any such wharf, pier, or dock; and wherever the distance between any two such wharves, piers, or docks, measured along the shore line connecting them, is less than 880 yards, an alien enemy shall not approach or be found within 100 yards of such shore line."

"The areas prescribed by Regulation 13 are, with the exception of a qualified right of passage direct through such areas in public conveyances or on public streets leading to and from a public ferry or on bridges constituting a public thoroughfare through such a barred zone, absolutely barred to German alien enemies, male and female.

"The object of this regulation is to provide adequate protection of shipping and of the docks, piers, wharves, warehouses, elevators, and similar waterfront facilities engaged in the operation of shipping, particularly the shipping of supplies necessary for the prosecution of the war. The protection of this property obviously cannot be obtained without the full co-operation of those owning or operating these facilities, upon whom the responsibility for affording such protection rests equally with the Government.

"In order effectively to enforce Regulation 13, the Department of Justice has from time to time issued instructions to the owners of docks and other waterfront facilities and has put into operation a waterfront pass system. No passes or permits to enter these restricted areas are issued to German alien enemies, male or female. All other persons who for any reason seek access to these docks or waterfront facilities, except when they are bona fide passengers going to or from a passenger vessel as hereinafter stated, are required to have a waterfront pass under the regulations made by the Department of Justice. In certain particular instances the department has approved of pass systems which have been instituted and put into force by owners or operators of waterfront facilities, but such approved pass systems are usually restricted to the employes of such owners or operators, and all other persons are required to have the form of waterfront pass prescribed by the Department of Justice.

"These passes are to be obtained from the United States Marshals except in certain of the larger cities, such as New York and Baltimore, where they may be obtained from the Collector of Customs, who administers the pass system for the Department of Justice. In the operation of the pass system the department has ruled that bona fide passengers are not required to have and present passes to enable them to embark or disembark from passenger vessels, but this ruling does not mean that alien enemies of any nationality are to be permitted upon passenger boats in violation of any of the other regulations of the President's proclamation relating to such persons.

"The owners and operators of the wharves and of the passenger vessels are urged to see that the process of loading or unloading passengers from the passenger vessels is conducted so as to minimize the danger from hostile persons, and that the passengers are required to move without stopping when passing from the dock or wharf which must be used by them in getting to or from a passenger vessel, and that they are excluded from all parts of the dock or wharf not actually necessary for access to or from such passenger vessel."

Hunter College War Rally.

A patriotic rally representing 16,000 college women will be held at Hunter College next Saturday afternoon in aid of war activities of the Associated Alumnae, who have sent five ambulances to France. Dr. George Samler Davis, President of the college, will introduce George Gordon Battle of the General War Work Committee, and Abram I. Elkus, former Ambassador to Turkey, who will discuss the war's effect on education of women. There will also be speeches by Mrs. Mary Lease and Miss Grace Parker, Commandant of the National League for Women's Service. The demand for places at the mass meeting has exceeded the capacity of the hall, and no more tickets will be issued.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New York.—In the matter of EDWARD H. JEWETT, CHARLES H. JEWETT, GEORGE W. JEWETT, ALPHEUS REHBEIN and JAMES G. MARSHALL, individually and as members of the firm of JEWETT BROS., and the firm of JEWETT BROS., Alleged Bankrupts.—In Bankruptcy.—No. 25,377.

On reading and filing the annexed petition of Allen R. Memhard, Receiver herein, from which it appears that the above named alleged bankrupts have made an offer of composition to creditors of the firm of Jewett Brothers and that it is necessary for the proper consideration thereof, and the due and proper administration of the estate of said firm that a determination should be had of the nature and amount of claims asserted by all persons against property in the hands of the Receiver, or to which he may be entitled, and that provision be made for a realization in cash upon the membership in the New York Stock Exchange, constituting one of the assets of said firm, and that the amount of the respective claims of creditors be fixed and determined, it is, on motion of Hays, Hershfield & Wolf and Rosenberg & Ball, attorneys for said Receiver.

Ordered, that the meeting of creditors of the firm of Jewett Bros., alleged bankrupts, called to be held in Room 235, Post Office Building, Borough of Manhattan, New York City, at 2 o'clock P. M. on May 21, 1918, pursuant to order of this Court, dated April 26, 1918, be and the same hereby is adjourned and ordered to be held before the undersigned Judge of this Court in Room 235, Post Office Building, Borough of Manhattan, New York City, at 2 o'clock P. M., on June 3, 1918, for the allowance of claims, examinations of the bankrupts and to consider the offer of composition referred to in said order and for all the other purposes referred to in said order and in this order. At the said adjourned hearing or any adjournment thereof this Court will make such order relative to the sale or other disposition of assets of the alleged bankrupts in the hands of the Receiver, or to which he may be entitled, including the membership in the Stock Exchange in the name of Edward H. Jewett, as may be deemed just and proper.

Further ordered, that each and every creditor, customer, claimant or other person claiming any right, title or interest in or to any property in the possession, custody or control of the Receiver herein, or to which he or any trustee in bankruptcy herein may be entitled, or claiming any rights in respect thereof other than those of a general unsecured creditor of the said firm, shall file written and verified claim thereof or to the proceeds thereof, with the said Allen R. Memhard, Receiver, at his office, No. 120 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, New York City, on or before June 15, 1918; and it is

Further ordered, that each and every customer, creditor, claimant or other person claiming any right, title or interest in and to any property in the hands of the Receiver, or to which he or any trustee in bankruptcy may be entitled, who shall not file such written and verified claim therefor, or to the proceeds thereof, on or before June 15, 1918, shall be forever barred, if said composition is accepted and confirmed, from making claim or asserting any right, title, interest or ownership therein or thereto or to the proceeds thereof; and it is Further ordered, that a copy of this order shall be published in The New York Times once prior to May 21, 1918, and once during the calendar week beginning May 27th, 1918, and also on June 3, and June 10, 1918, and that the Receiver shall cause a copy of this order to be mailed on or before May 20, 1918, to each and every person appearing in the schedules as a customer or creditor of or claimant against the said firm, or as a creditor of the individual alleged bankrupts, or who shall have filed notice of appearance in this proceeding, and that the Receiver shall also cause to be mailed therewith or attached to or endorsed upon each copy of the order so mailed to the customer creditors of said firm, a notice stating the amount at which his claim has been set forth in the schedules filed herein, and such mailing and publication shall constitute due, timely and sufficient notice to each and every person of all of the matters set forth herein and to each customer, claimant and creditor that if the composition is approved his claim will be allowed as a general unsecured claim at the amount appearing in the schedules filed herein.

The direct obligation of a Company which owns and controls valuable hydro-electric properties, the earnings of which are largely in excess of all fixed charges. The present installed capacity of the plants is over 58,000 horse power, of which 47,000 horse power is hydro-electric and the balance generated by oil-burning engines.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

In the Midst of Million-Share Days

Restraints under which the stock market had been held for more than a year were pushed aside by the rising tide of speculative trading following announcement that the Third Liberty Loan had been well oversubscribed, and almost lost sight of last week as the movement spread and gained momentum. For months, with hardly any reactions, prices had sagged until a condition was reached in which it was perfectly plain that it would need but a small stimulus in the shape of a reawakened demand to start prices upward. The closing of the loan campaign supplied psychological conditions favorable to the inauguration of a new buying movement for stocks which were returning abnormal dividend yields, and luck favored the new market with an absence of unfavorable war news, while domestic conditions were most favorable. It is doubtful if even the large speculative traders who believed the time ripe for a demonstration of confidence had any idea that a bull market could be built up in such a short space of time, and they were made uneasy by the rapidity of the advance, which was not halted by periodic reactions until some of the active issues had moved up from 10 to 20 points. They were surprised at the wealth of bullish news which people discovered once their attention was called to rising prices. The loan was oversubscribed by nearly 40 per cent., the May 1 crop report disclosed a record improvement in the condition of the principal cereal, the shipbuilding program began to produce results fully up to the early expectations, the threatened overturn of the British Ministry was averted, and the hope of an unprecedented increase in railroad rates was held out in a semi-official announcement from Washington.

Each full trading day last week saw more than a million shares done, and the average was maintained through the two hours of the closing session. Such a market draws strength from an ever widening circle of traders, until the proportion of professional operations to commission business is down to the minimum. It creates a better field for the investment banker and quickens business, but if allowed to pass reasonable bounds becomes dangerous by absorbing an undue amount of banking funds. At some point prices will pass the values back of them and set the stage for a slump. It looked at the middle of the week as though discretion had been thrown to the winds by the purchasers of industrial issues which had been marked up without regard to fundamental conditions, but the rise was checked by selling encouraged by those who had helped to get the bull market under way, and a healthier tone prevailed at the end of the week. When traders begin to disregard reasons other than the fact that certain stocks are moving upward no story is too improbable to receive a hearing. An issue which was in popular disfavor at 80 becomes for a brief time the speculative leader around par, and the stocks with established earnings records are neglected in the pursuit after new favorites with nothing to commend them other than the prospect that some one else will buy them at still higher levels. When the movement slows down the stocks that have been footballs of speculation slump off as rapidly as they advanced. A market such as was witnessed last week emphasizes the need for caution.

The Red Cross has become such a vital part of the nation's contribution toward winning the war that neither stockholders nor directors are likely to offer objections to the proposal that corporations having a surplus over their requirements for fixed charges should appropriate this week up to 1 per cent. on their capital stock toward the $100,000,000 fund which the leaders must raise. In the first drive for contributions the leading corporations declared from one-quarter of 1 per cent. to 1 per cent. in special dividends for the benefit of the Red Cross, and the total amounts so declared were included in the reports of the progress of the campaign. For one reason or another a considerable part of this good-will offering never reached the organization for which it was intended. In many instances, undoubtedly, the recipients of the dividends had taken them into account in making direct contributions, while in others there were legal obstacles in the way of turning the checks over. Since then the Legislatures of this State, New Jersey, and Massachusetts have enacted laws authorizing corporations under their jurisdiction to make appropriations up to an amount equivalent to 1 per cent. of their share capital for the benefit of the Red Cross. Inasmuch as it would be difficult, if not impossible, to discover a single company of any size which has not from one to some thousand former employes now in war service, the stockholders can feel that in providing for the Red Cross they are making a direct contribution for the welfare of their own men.

Under pre-war conditions the proposed transfer of practically all of the vessels owned by the International Mercantile Marine to British interests would be looked upon as sounding the death knell of the American merchant marine, but with several hundred new freighters ordered and building in United States yards the transfer is not likely to prejudice the position of our foreign commerce after the war, especially as the vessels are already under the British flag. The time is opportune for this country to correct the mistakes that made her foreign trade almost entirely dependent upon foreign bottoms. To give American shipowners a fair field in the world competition it should be determined whether or not vessels can be constructed here as cheaply as abroad; the classification should be made uniform; restrictive laws covering the employment of seamen revised where they impose obvious disadvantages against ships under the flag of the United States, and the Government's War Risk Bureau continued in some form after the war to provide for insurance which cannot be placed with private companies. In the past the British have been able to control the movements of American-owned vessels because they carried at least a part of the insurance, and the power to make rates is the power to route the risks. Shipping authorities hold that in future the operator should be enabled to place with a Government agency any part of his insurance that he cannot obtain through the regular companies, if he is not to be subjected to control of foreign shipping interests.

LAND BANKS OFFER FARM LOAN BONDS

New Issue to Bear 5% Interest and Be Sold Through Banking Syndicate.

HUGHES INDORSES THEM

Probably $30,000,000 of the Securities Will Be Ready for Delivery on July 15.

The twelve Federal Land Banks are now making loans to farmers at the rate of about $15,000,000 a month, and arrangements have just been made for the sale of Farm Loan bonds through a banking syndicate consisting of Alexander Brown & Sons, Harris, Forbes & Co., Brown Brothers & Co., Lee, Higginson & Co., and the National City Company, the group possessing wide distributing powers.

The last issue of Farm Loan bonds was put out at 4½ per cent., but the new offering consists of 5 per cent. securities, the rate having been raised in order to meet present security market prices. The 5 per cent. bonds will be sold to the public at 101 and interest, at which price they will net 4¾ per cent. to the redeemable date (1923) and 5 per cent. thereafter up to redemption or maturity.

The bonds are "instrumentalities" of the United States, and as such are exempt from Federal, State, Municipal, and local taxation, and their tax exemption features are as complete as those of the 3½ per cent. bonds of the First Liberty Loan. The bonds are acceptable by the United States Treasury as security for Government deposits, including Postal Savings funds; and they are eligible for investment by savings banks in twenty-five States.

An indefinite amount of these bonds will be offered, depending upon the operations of the Federal Land Banks, but the understanding is that $30,000,000 will be ready for delivery on or before July 15. The bonds are in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000.

Ex-Justice Charles E. Hughes has prepared an opinion on the constitutionality of the Federal Farm Loan act, and particularly with respect to the validity of the bonds and the provisions exempting them from taxation. Mr. Hughes says:

My conclusion is that the Farm Loan bonds to be issued by the Federal Land Banks organized and controlled as provided in the Federal Farm Loan Act will be, when duly issued and paid for, valid securities, constituting as declared by Congress instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and that they and the income derived therefrom will be exempt as provided in the act from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation; and further that, with respect to bonds duly issued and paid for under this exemption, it will constitute a continuing exemption which cannot be withdrawn by subsequent legislation.

The previous issue of Farm Loan bonds, which consisted of 4½ per cent. securities, was offered at 100½ to yield about 4.40 per cent. There are now outstanding approximately $160,000,000 of Farm Loan bonds, of which the United States Treasury holds about $50,000,000.

NOTICE.—PHILADELPHIA COMPANY CONSOLIDATED MORTGAGE AND COLLATERAL TRUST 5% 50-YEAR GOLD BONDS, dated November 1st, 1901, stamped under Sinking Fund Contract of July 10th, 1917.

Sealed proposals will be received until 3 o'clock p. m. Thursday, June 6th, 1918, at the office of COMMERCIAL TRUST COMPANY, City Hall Square, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Trustee under Sinking Fund Contract dated July 10th, 1917, with the PHILADELPHIA COMPANY, for the sale to them of all or any part of so many bonds of $1000 each of the PHILADELPHIA COMPANY Consolidated Mortgage and Collateral Trust 5% Gold Bonds, which have been stamped under the terms of said Contract, as the sum of $276,080 will purchase, in accordance with the terms of the said Contract.

Lowest bids at a price not exceeding 102½% of the par value and accrued interest within the amount stated will be accepted, and payment made on surrender of the bonds on June 7th, when interest on the bonds so accepted will cease.

The Trustee reserves the right to reject any or all bids not satisfactory to it.

Should two or more holders bid the same lowest price, the number of bonds taken from each will be, as nearly as practicable, pro rata.

KNOWN DEAD BY TNT EXPLOSION NOW 56

Thirty-one Persons Are Still Missing—94 Injured in the Hospitals.

FUMES HAMPER THE SEARCH

Brown Smoke Hangs Over Debris of Demolished Plant—Countryside Seared for Several Miles.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., May 19.—Fifty-six men are known to be dead, ninety-four injured are in hospitals, and thirty-one employes of the Aetna Chemical Company are missing as a result of the nine explosions yesterday that wrecked this company's explosive manufacturing plant at Oakdale, sixteen miles from this city. This report is the result of the day's investigation by State, Federal, county, and city officials, and of the work of scores of men, under direction of Coroner Samuel C. Jamison.

Throughout the night and all day today men were extinguishing small fires in the débris and were bringing out remnants of human bodies. In most cases there was nothing to identify the victim.

While earlier explosions wrecked the plant, the last one, about 6:30, blew the piles of débris clear of the ground and scattered them over more acreage than before, blackening everything beyond recognition.

All day a brown smoke continued to hang over the ruins, considerably impeding the work of the searchers. Its deadly fumes are feared by the rest—a slight breeze would lift the smoke would searchers be able to get close to the piles of débris.

For a time the work was impeded further by the thousands of sightseers, who flocked to the scene from the surrounding country. Automobiles blocked all roads to and from the place, and another company of the State Constabulary was rushed in automobiles from Greensburg to establish a greater cordon about the scene of the disaster. The crowds were ordered back, and automobiles were turned back when they had reached within five miles of Oakdale. Later a complete cordon encircled the plant a mile and a half, and only those having business were admitted past the guards.

Thousands of persons streamed into the temporary morgue all day to view the bodies, and it took a special detail of police to keep this morbid element in check. There were many there of right, however, and some identifications were thus made. Pitiful scenes were enacted, and one in particular when Adam Partz, one of the Coroner's workers in the morgue, collapsed. He had found in a bucket a bunch of keys and a penknife which had belonged to his son. The son had been employed in the plant.

The country is desolate for an area of several miles around the plant, where the former green hillsides have been seared and burned by the blasts. The meadows and fields have been seared, and fruit and shade trees have been blasted and denuded of their foliage.

Federal officers, representing the Department of Justice, today ordered the arrest of two men who were photographing the ruins and who were charged by a woman with making seditious remarks.

A special policeman employed by the Aetna Chemical Company arrested two men early today as they were about to hurry away from the plant on a motor cycle. The names and charges upon which these men are held are withheld by officials pending investigation.
